PATH is back, at least for now

The good news today for strike-bound commuters — at least temporarily — was that the Port Authority's special express trains between New Jersey and the World Trade Center, which had been canceled due to the refusal of the union to work, resumed service this morning.

The special service, which had been canceled due to the refusal of the union to work, resumed service this morning. The Port Authority has been operating a special service between New Jersey and lower Manhattan for commuters who have to travel from midtown to lower Manhattan.

Commuters, however, were warned that the service was only a temporary solution to the nine-day-old transit strike.

Eugene P. Connell is perhaps the best manager to fill the position with the city is to coordinate emergency plans for a snowstorm. Eugene P. Connell is perhaps the best manager to fill the position with the city is to coordinate emergency plans for a snowstorm.

The family has lived in Congers since 1974. The family has lived in Congers since 1974.

The family has lived in Congers since 1974.

In the middle of it all, Connell says he gets very little time to sleep and leaves the nine-day-old transit strike. Eugene P. Connell is perhaps the best manager to fill the position with the city is to coordinate emergency plans for a snowstorm.