Transit Victory for Queens

By AUSTIN S. FERLO

Queens will have the transit tunnel. The selection of the Fairview-Belt route was only a formality. That much was agreed on a year ago at a top-level conference of the Metropolitan Transportation Authority.

Mayor Wagner, Queens Borough President Marie J. Carlini, Transportation Commissioner Arthur Johnstone and chairman of the Public Service Commission's acting chairman, Francis J. Flushing agreed that a transit tunnel must be built in Queens. In a statement issued after the meeting at the office of Queens Borough President Marie J. Carlini, the three top officials said that a transit tunnel in Queens is "an urgent necessity."

The agreement came after an hour and 45 minutes of heated discussion.

The agreement was a compromise plan which satisfied all the city agencies represented.

Only the Board of Estimate had to be involved in the decision. It is believed that Mayor Wagner will leave the choice of the Fairview-Belt to the committee June 3. Only the committee will be involved in the decision on the party's fall election.
