Inquirers at the Triborough Bridge and Tunnel Authority, which proposes to erect the biggest bridge ever built in the United States, called the lack of funds for construction of necessary Brooklyn and Queens approaches "the main cause of delay..." At the same time, the authority issued a press statement saying that the Brooklyn-White Stone Bridge would be ready in 1956 for traffic to move in 1956 and was expected to be still more heavily overtaxed each succeeding year.

In the annual report, signed by Robert Moses, chairman of the Triborough Bridge and Tunnel Authority, it was disclosed that the Brooklyn-White Stone Bridge was ready in 1956 for traffic to move in 1956 and was expected to be still more heavily overtaxed each succeeding year.

"We could go from shore to shore without any trouble," he said, "but the problem is getting the traffic to the bridge. Without the proper connections, we can't move traffic on the New York Expressway."

After the new approaches would take 3.5 years to complete, the old approaches would be removed.

The bridge will pass from north to south high over the grounds of the State Maritime College at Fort Schuyler, with the cable from the proposed New England Sound Tower, would be a single suspension bridge with a total length of a mile, including the anchorage.

Because of the low ground on each side, a 3,000-foot approach ramp would be needed on the Bronx and a 2,800-foot ramp in Queens.
