Brownsville Opposes a New JHS

By ROGER COMARDO

The Board of Education's proposal for a new junior high school in Brownsville, Brooklyn, has met with opposition from civic leaders in the neighborhood, who have expressed concerns about the impact on the community.

The new school, which is scheduled to open in the fall, is part of the city's efforts to improve educational facilities in underserved areas. However, some residents have raised concerns about the proposal, citing potential negative effects on traffic, safety, and education quality.

"It's a waste of money," said a concerned parent. "We already have overcrowded schools here. This won't solve our problems."

The opposition has also highlighted the lack of consultation with the community, arguing that the proposal was not developed with the input of local residents.

"They said they asked for input," said another neighbor. "But when we met with them, they wouldn't listen. They just told us what they were going to do."

The Board of Education has defended its decision, pointing to the need for additional educational facilities and the benefits of having a new school in Brownsville. However, the opposition persists, with many residents calling for a more inclusive and transparent planning process.

Greenpoint Hospital Sets Off a Storm

By LAWRENCE FABBIAN

The Board of Health has proposed opening a new hospital in Greenpoint, Brooklyn, which has激起了热烈的讨论。The proposal, which would replace the current hospital, is seen by some as a necessary step to improve healthcare in the area, while others are concerned about the impact on the community.

"It's a bad idea," said one resident. "We don't need another hospital in our neighborhood."

The proposal has also been met with criticism from medical professionals, who argue that the existing hospital is already struggling to meet the needs of the community.

"We're already overburdened," said Dr. Sarah Smith, a local doctor. "We don't need more patients."

The Board of Health has defended its decision, pointing to the need for additional capacity and the benefits of having a modern hospital. However, the opposition persists, with many residents calling for a more thorough analysis of the proposal's impact on the community.
