Bureaus Plan Million and Half Jobs in Year

Crippling Shortage Reported; Capital's Love to Girls Fades

By RUTH GORDON
Washington—The Government probably will hire 1,500,000 more workers to keep up with demands for new defense projects during the next year, according to the Civil Service Commission today.

The Government is on course to fill about 1,200,000 of these new jobs, but the shortage will continue to be serious. The Civil Service Commission said it will have difficulty finding staff for some of the jobs.

In today's competitive labor market, job hunters can have as many as five interviews for a job. Several of the jobs require a high degree of skill and knowledge.

The job of light is the best, but the job of heavy labor is the worst. The job of light involves more physical activity and requires more skill than the job of heavy labor.
