THE DAILY TIMES

Emma Abbot and M. Gounod.

"Can I see M. Gounod?" [illegible] Emma Abbott, [illegible] and without a letter of [illegible] the hall of M. [illegible] London. The servant [illegible] blank to be [illegible] printed "[illegible]" whom introduced [illegible] handed the card [illegible].

"I don't want to sign," said M. Gounod.

A sharp voice came [illegible] the stairs. "It [illegible] M. Gounod's [illegible] "What [illegible] want?"

Miss Abbott [illegible] the stairs "I want to see M. Gounod and sing [illegible] an American girl."

"You cannot sing [illegible] Weldon, "and you [illegible]"

"Oh! I can sing the [illegible] 'Faust.' Won't [illegible]"

"I say, child," [illegible] severely, "you [illegible] the person living who can sing [illegible]"

"Oh!" said Miss Abbott [illegible] Patti." "Patti," with a shrug, "Patti is nothing but a [illegible] can sing."

"Then you mean Nilsson."

"Nilsson! No. Her voice is worn out long ago."

"Who can it be, then?" and Miss Abbott's eyes expressed her [illegible].

"It is myself, Mme. Weldon."

"Oh, Mrs. Weldon, won't you sing for me? I should so like to hear you."

Mme. Weldon led the way to the [illegible]. She sung, and Miss Abbott applauded.

"Now, Mrs. Weldon, you shall hear me sing." And, suiting the action to the word, Miss Abbott began the Jewel Song. She had proceeded but a few bars when Mme. Weldon tried to stop her. "There, there, child, stop your [illegible] sing." Suddenly a voice from the top of the next flight of stairs called out: "Mrs. Weldon! where have you got there?" Before Mme. Weldon could reply, Miss Abbott shot past her and up the stairs. "O! M. Gounod, it is I, Emma Abbott, an American girl, and I want to sing for you!"

Mme. Weldon had followed her up the stairs and tried to stop her.

"She cannot sing, M. Gounod, and I want her to go away."

"She shall not go away," replied Gounod, "and she shall sing."

He then seated himself at the piano, and began the accompaniment. He played it as Miss Abbott had never heard it played. She began the song. Mme. Weldon again tried to stop her, but Gounod forbade her interrupting. He said "Miss Abbot should not leave the house till she had sung the song." He again commenced the accompaniment and told Miss Abbott to sing. Uttering an inward prayer, she obeyed. It was a [illegible] opera and she threw into the [illegible] all her power and feeling. When she concluded her eyes were full of tears. Gounod rose from the piano and took her by both hands. He said "Miss Abbot, you have sung my song better than I ever heard it sung." He then took from a drawer an elegantly bound copy of "Faust." "My child," said he, "I want you to accept this from me." Seating himself at the table, he took a pen and wrote in the frontispiece

TO MISS EMMA ABBOTT.
FROM CHARLES GOUNOD.

In token of Miss Abbott's singing for him, this day, the Jewel Song from "Faust" better than he ever heard it sung.

CHARLES GOUNOD.

A Brave Girl's Fight.

While Mary Garry, the domestic in charge of the residence of District-Attorney Phelps, corner of Forty-seventh street and Sixth Avenue, was sweeping the sidewalk on Saturday morning last, at 7 o'clock, a burglar entered unseen. On returning to the house, of which she was the sole occupant, Mary saw the intruder in the act of rifling the bureau drawer in the bedroom of Mr. Phelps, on the second floor. On finding himself discovered, the thief walked toward the windows and pretended that he wanted to examine them. She, however, divined the true state of affairs at a glance and rushed toward the burglar alarm. The burglar, however, seeing her intention sprang forward, seized her by the throat and placing a pistol at her head, swore he would kill her if she made any further alarm.

The courageous girl, nothing daunted, followed the burglar, who dragged her down stairs to the vestibule in his efforts to escape. The hall door being closed and the girl still holding on to the burglar, another struggle took place, in the course of which the intruder dropped a "jimmy." Finally, thinking that she could obtain assistance speedily from the street, the girl opened the hall door with one hand, while with the other she retained her hold of the burglar. No sooner, however, did the intruder find the door open than he broke from the girl's grasp and cleared the stoop with a bound, turning the street corner in a second. The girl pursued him along Sixth Avenue, shouting, "stop thief," and was joined by some workmen in the vicinity. The burglar, however, distanced his pursuer, and, jumping into a wagon in waiting on Forty-eighth Street, was driven off at a lively pace by two confederates. A strict search of the house was made by the police, but it was found that nothing had been stolen, the burglar having been disturbed just as he was about to commence operations.—N. Y. Times.

Rather Green.

Here is a match for Talleyrand's wife, who complimented Sir Sidney Smith on the adventures of Robinson Crusoe and asked after his man Friday. "Two gentlemen were talking before a French lady, the wife of one of them, of the late introduction of the potato into France compared with England. Said Mrs. G. "Yes, you have had potatoes in England for three hundred years." "Oh, hardly so long," replied his friend, "potatoes came from America, which has not been discovered three hundred years yet." "What!" exclaimed Madame G—, "America not been discovered more than three centuries?" She was assured such was the fact. After a few moments' reflection she said, "Mais, mon ami, how comes it, then, that the Americans, who are so clever, who invented my sewing machine, did not discover me sooner?" Tableau."

Miscellaneous.

The keeper of one of the state prisons in France liberated a prisoner. His reason for doing so was thus related to the minister of the interior: "I summoned him to my office. He treated me with disrespect. I told him that, unless he behaved himself, I would put him out. He continued his disorderly conduct, and I just kicked him into the street. That's how it was."

Corinthian Monuments.

MADE FROM PURE CAST ZINC.

Are the Cheapest and the Best.

THEY NEVER CRACK, NEVER CHANGE COLOR.

No Resemblance Whatever to Sheet Zinc.

These Monuments and Headmarkers are cast THICK and STRONG and will not "dent" nor [illegible] away, but are put up

More Firm, More Secure than Marble can be.

Do not be deceived by misrepresentations of those who would palm off upon you cheap Vermont marble or Italian Marble, which will so soon become blackened, stained and moss grown—very displeasing, to say the least, to people of taste and refinement.

The Corinthian will always Retain their Beauty.

Confirming this we have many evidences and testimonials of which we present the following.

CAST ZINC STATUARY EXPOSED TO THE ELEMENTS OVER 300 YEARS WITHOUT CHANGE.

Certificate of Signor Cortepassi, the well-known artist and Sculptor, of Cincinnati, Ohio, formerly of Florence, Italy.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN: This certifies that I have seen the "Statue Fopperona," which was cast from Zinc, and erected in the city of Lucca, Italy, over three hundred years ago, according to the records, and has stood constant exposure to the elements since, and no sign of corrosion or change in color has taken place.

Cincinnati, Ohio, Feb. 20, 1876. A. CORTEPASSI.

(From the Massachusetts State Assayer of Metals, the Highest Authority in the East.)

I consider the FROSTED ZINC CORINTHIAN MONUMENTS practically indestructible. They will not blacken or become dingy with age. Moss will not adhere or grow upon their surface as upon other marble and the color will remain unchangeable while the monuments endure. In my opinion these monuments will outlast the very stone foundation on which they stand.

S. P. SHARPLES, State Assayer of Metals for Massachusetts.

114 State Street, Boston, May 4th, 1876.

These Monuments, Mounds, Coping, etc., have the color of our American Granites—most beautiful in design and embellishments—and though they are the BEST, they cost you less money! Come and see them at OF LEE' CHINA HALL, 15 Woodruff House Block, Watertown.
