BRIGHT & CO.

Rufus Lynde had just got comfortably settled in his new store. The window it had only one, being well, not a large store was, after much thought and experimenting, arranged to his satisfaction, the bright colored scarfs and cravats and neck ties forming a sort of rainbow against the somber background of black ones, the packages of kid gloves, showing the tips of their many hued fingers at the ends of their gilt and white wrappers, the gaudiest silk handkerchiefs flying like so many young flags about the dozen or two other articles pertaining to the masculine wardrobe which, in admirable taste and order, were grouped below them—when his one clerk, who was also errand boy and several other things—in fact, engaged for "general utility," as they say in the dramatic profession—rushed in, with a face every feature of which said as plainly as words, "important news!"

Rufus looked at him a moment. "What is it, Fred?" he asked at last.

"One hundred and thirty-six is taken," said Fred, pausing to give due effect to whatever further communication he had to make.

"Well?" queried his employer.

"Same business as ourn, gent's furnishing," continued Fred.

"Don't say 'ourn,' and don't say 'gents,'" said Rufus, in his surprise relapsing for a moment into his old role of teacher.

"Well, 'tis," said Fred sulkily.

"The deuce it is!" exclaimed Rufus, resuming the character of the man of business, as he threw down the collars he had been assorting, and walked moodily to the door.

Before the next store, which had been vacant for a long time, stood a heavily laden cart. Two men were unloading and carrying in boxes and cases the same shape and size as those which had contained his own goods. A tall, rather rough-looking young man was superintending, and a boy—evidently "general utility" like Fred—was darting hither and thither with a great pretense of rendering valuable assistance.

Rufus stepped out on the sidewalk, whistling carelessly, and becoming at once very much interested in an overworked horse that had fallen across the car track; but as the horse was helped to his feet by a sympathizing crowd, he slowly turned and came in again, giving as he passed a comprehensive glance at the neighboring establishment.

Every pane in the window—it also had only one window—shone like an overgrown diamond, and in each corner was already placed, on a pretty walnut stand, a pot of ivy, the dark green vines climbing the gray papered wall, while the scarlet flowers of a flourishing geranium smiled gaily in the sunshine.

A sign above the door, beside which the modest one bearing his name looked like a dwarf beside a giant, bore in great glittering letters the inscription, "Bright & Co."

"Going in for combining poetry with business. Twon't pay," said Rufus, referring to the ivy and geranium, as he slammed his own door behind him, and seating himself at his desk, took up the morning paper, but not to read. He had lost all interest in the political situation; all he did was to gaze vacantly at the printed sheet and think about his rival to be—"Bright & Co."

"This neighborhood won't support us both, that's sure," he said. "It must be a hand-to-hand fight until one is left victor. Too bad! too bad! Here's sister Fan nicely married, and mother as comfortable and happy as can be in her little rooms around the corner, and I thought I saw smooth sailing before me at last. After teaching school five long years away out West, besides keeping books for people and copying law documents far into the night, to say nothing of living like a miser all the time, on purpose to save money enough to start in business in my native city—to have a fellow set up right next door in the very same business. It's too much," and Rufus shook his head at the frowning face that looked at him from the mirror that hung opposite.

A young face, and not a disagreeable one on the contrary, quite an agreeable one when minus the scowl, surmounted by waving locks of bright auburn—some people called them red—and lighted by a pair of real blue eyes. Nose aquiline, moustache to match the hair, mouth large and not so very ugly, and the chin—well, perhaps if the chin had been a trifle more prominent, and the hair a shade less—auburn, Rufus might have possessed more hopefulness and a better temper.

That very evening—such is the inconsistency of man—in spite of his assertion that "that sort of thing didn't pay," Rufus bought at the nearest florist's two Madeira vines, a smilax, and a spicy carnation pink, and the next morning there they were sweetly blooming in his window, when the tall, rather rough-looking young man who had been overseeing the carmen the day before, came briskly in.

"Mr. Lynde?" he said.

Rufus bowed stiffly.

"Called to see if you'd let me take a look at the arrangement of your window from the inside—capital effect outside. How do you manage? I don't know much about such things myself."

"What cool impertinence!" thought Rufus. And then he said, in an icy manner and in an icy tone, "I'm afraid you won't be taught here, sir. It costs me time, thought and patience to produce the 'capital effect' of which you speak. You must use your own brains. Mine are not at your service."

"Oh! is that the way you feel?" said the young man with a chuckle. "Well, I guess Bright & Co. can do without you;" and he disappeared as suddenly as he came.

And apparently "Bright & Co." could, for in two or three hours the shop window of that enterprising firm burst upon the admiring gaze of the passer-by like a whole garden of flowers.

Such a delicate mingling of shades and skillful combination of colors had never been seen in a shop window before—at least not in that avenue. Dark purple scarfs and ribbons prettily entwined with those of pale yellow; smoking-caps gay in crimson and golds, and blues and buffs and scarlets and greens; bows of every hue, looking like a flock of gigantic butterflies clinging to a carpet of dark brown velvet; beautifully embroidered slippers; silked and satin watch fobs of many fantastic shapes; pipe-holders quaint and graceful in design, and fifty other things Rufus had never thought of, "but which women will be just fools enough to buy and give to men," he said to himself bitterly, as he from his own window viewed the [illegible].

Poor fellow. That gorgeous window completely eclipsed his own, and he saw, with a heartache, the people pass his door day after day and enter the more attractive store of Bright & Co.

A week went by during which Mr. Lynde refused the use of a hammer to [illegible] his neighbors, and their cat was a very gentle [illegible] which she chased [illegible] into his store and under his counter [illegible] Fred had a rough and tumble fight with the boy, because he swept all the dirt off his own sidewalk on to ourn.

Then one uncommonly bright and pleasant Monday morning as Rufus, refreshed by the Sabbath rest, was coming down the street humming an old hymn tune which his mother, good old Methodist, was fond of singing, and happily forgetful for the moment of all life's cares and vexations, his eye was caught by an unusual glare at the very top of "Bright & Co.'s" building. A mammoth sign had been placed there, calling attention in enormously fat letters of the gaudiest gilt—large enough to be seen at least half a mile away—to the business of that wonderfully and aggravatingly go ahead firm; and that sign trespassed at least two inches on his own premises.

Rufus ceased humming, scowled, quickened his steps, entered his store, seated himself at his desk, flung his hat on the floor, ran his fingers through his sanguinary locks until they stood up like an aureole around his head, seized pen, paper and ink, and dashed off the following note:

"Mr. Lynde's compliments to Bright & Co., and begs to call their attention to the fact that their last and biggest sign exceeds the limits allowed them by law."

This, with a snort of delight, as a war horse that scenteth the battle afar, did Fred receive and hasten to deliver next door, to return with answer, equally concise, written in a large, bold, but rather scrawley hand:

"Bright & Co. are sorry that the signmaker should have made such a mistake; but unless Mr. Lynde wishes to put up a similar sign, they are at a loss to see how so slight an infringement can interfere with him."

"Oh, indeed!" said Rufus, his face almost as fiery as his hair. "What remarkable coolness the fellow has! But I'll let him see he can't completely overshadow his humble neighbor," and forthwith dispatched another note:

"Mr. Lynde demands the instant removal of the before-mentioned sign, or Mr. Lynde's lawyer will wait on Bright & Co. this afternoon."

To which came the short but pertinent reply:

"Mr. Lynde's lawyer may wait on Bright & Co. as soon as Mr. Lynde chooses."

But it happened that Rufus couldn't get away from the store that day. Some great festivity, to take place that evening in the vicinity, sent all the boys and young men in search of masculine necessities and adornments, and the overflow from Bright & Co.'s alone was sufficient to keep Rufus and his only assistant extremely busy. But as soon as night had fairly set in and the rush was over, he sent Fred, a delighted messenger—with a communication to a young lawyer friend, and with resolution and defiance written on his brow, and hands firmly clasped behind him, he began slowly pacing backward and forward, his determination to fight it out with his neighbor growing stronger and stronger every moment; for, "in the first place, it was downright shabby to set up in the very same line right next door," he repeated for the twentieth time. "I couldn't and wouldn't have done it; but, no doubt, this Bright is some selfish, grasping, cold-hearted, unpleasant fellow, not caring who he shoulders out of the way as long as he"—when suddenly the door flew open, and the roundest, plumpest, prettiest bit of a woman flew in.

She wore a dainty white apron, with a bewitching bib and two charming pockets, and the pockets were adorned with scarlet bows, and the bib had a bit of scarlet geranium pinned at the left corner, and a saucy small hat, turned up on one side and trimmed with scarlet berries and green leaves, was perched inaccurately on the top of her satin-smooth black head.

"Mr. Lynde?" said she in a voice that implied, "I am not to be contradicted under any circumstances whatever," as she confronted Rufus.

Rufus replied, "At your service," with a smile. He'd have been more than mortal if he could have looked at that bright face, with its frank, fearless gray eyes, cunning pug nose, dear little mouth, and general air of cheerful independence, without smiling.

"I am Bright & Co."

"And rightly named," flashed through Lynde's mind; and then his face betrayed the great astonishment he felt, but he bowed and said nothing.

"You look surprised," said the little woman.

"I am," said Rufus. "I thought—I mean I was sure—that is, I supposed"—

"No matter what you supposed," interrupted "Bright & Co." in a manner that in any one else would have been rude, but in her was decidedly charming. "I'm Bright—and Company, and I want to know why, in the name of pins and needles, you're so awful hateful about that sign? It can't hurt you're house—if it is yours—or you, extending only that far" (holding out two tiny forefingers, with nails like wee pink shells, about half an inch from each other) "beyond my house—it is my house—and you know, if you have one grain of common sense, it can't."

She paused, but Rufus said never a word.

"I suppose," the little woman went on, shaking her pretty head so emphatically, that the saucy hat nearly slipped off, just hanging on her back hair in a manner that suggested to Rufus the days of his boyhood and the "Sailor's Hornpipe," "you think I have injured your business. If I have, I didn't mean to. The building next door was left to me by an old aunt, and the store was stocked from the wholesale establishment of an old uncle. Now, I couldn't set up a millinery shop or a flower store, or a confectionery, with shirts and socks, and collars, and cravats and suspenders—and such things—could I?"

"Of course not," replied Rufus; "I see no way in which they could be converted into bonnets, bouquets, or candy."

"Just so," said Bright & Co., putting her right hand into her pocket and drumming softly on the counter with the fingers of her left. "I took the house and thanked my lucky stars and my auntie; and I took the goods and thanked my lucky stars again and uncle. I placed 'Bright' over the door without any 'Miss,' (Rufus could not explain for the life of him why he was so relieved to find it wasn't 'Mrs.,' or Christian name, because it looks more business-like, and I added the 'Co.' because it sounds well, and my small brother (the one your Fred tried to thrash the other day) is my general assistant, and my big cousin (to whom you refused a look at your window) helps me in every way he can, though that isn't much, because he has his own business to attend to. ("Glad of it," thought Rufus.) And I have a pair of lovely twin sisters only six years old, and a dear mother and grand mother to take care of—and oh! how can you be so hateful about that sign?"

"Good gracious!" exclaimed Rufus, rubbing his fingers wildly through his red—that is, his auburn—curls, and causing the aureole to rise again. "Don't say another word about it. Cover the whole of your house and mine also—though it isn't mine; there, too, you have the advantage of me, as you have in everything else—with signs if you will. I can make a living for my mother and myself somewhere else, if not here. I have no large family depending upon me like Bright & Co."

"Oh, dear me, Mr. Lynde, that would not please me at all," said the little woman. "Go somewhere else, you know. Stay right here. There'll be room for us both after a while, I'm sure of it."

But a voice, and a rosy earnest face with an almost loverlike smile, as Fred burst into the store, saying, "The lawyer says to come to his office at 10 o'clock to-morrow morning and I'll see that the old sign comes down in a jiffy."

"Oh, you wicked boy!" said Bright & Co.

"Never mind that," said Rufus, "I give you my word that the sign shall remain just where it is," and seizing his hat, he escorted her to her door, leaving Fred in the act of executing a break-down illustrative of extreme astonishment, but too much astonished to whistle an accompaniment.

And the sign didn't come down—that is, it did eventually, but not until the next May, and then another, stretching twice the distance, took its place.

"Lynde, Bright & Co.," the new sign reads, and the two small stores are turned into one large one, and "Rufus Lynde" and "Bright & Co." are partners for life.

REMARKABLE RESULTS FOLLOW.—Pain ceases, swellings subside, fever abates, and a natural and healthy state exists after using this great and wonderful preparation known as Thomas' Eclectric Oil. Thousands testify to the happiness resulting from the use of this preparation. Why not procure a bottle at once. The cost is trifling, and effect sure. One dose cures common sore throat. One bottle has cured bronchitis. Fifty cents' worth has cured crick in the back, and the same quantity lame back of eight years' standing. The following are extracts from a few of the many letters that have been received from different parts, which, we think, should be sufficient to satisfy the most skeptical:

A Howser, of North Lansing, N. Y., writes, "I had a severe cold for four weeks, and was so hoarse that I could not speak. Hearing of your Eclectric Oil, I procured a bottle, which removed the hoarseness at once."

Thomas Robinson, Farnham Centre writes: "I have been afflicted with Rheumatism for the last ten years, and have tried many remedies without any relief until I tried 'Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil,' and since then have had no attack of it. I would recommend it to all."

See what the Medical Faculty say: Dr. Beaudoin, Hull, P. Q., says, "I have sold 'Thomas' Eclectric Oil' for two years, and I have never sold a medicine which has given more thorough satisfaction. I have used it in my own case, on a broken leg and dislocated ankle, with the best results."

A. H. Gregg, Manufacturer of Mowing Machines, Trumansburg, N. Y., says: "My thumb was caught in a machine and badly injured; being away from home, for two days, was obliged to apply such remedies as I could get, but without relieving the pain; immediately on reaching a home I applied the 'Eclectric Oil' with almost instant relief. I have a large number of men employed, and your Oil has established for itself such a reputation that nearly every one of them keep it."

Sold by all medicine dealers. Price, 25 cents, 50 cents and $1.00.

[To the Watertown Daily Times.]

GARFIELD'S REPORTED VIEWS ON THE SITUATION.

New York, Aug. 11.

A Tribune Columbus (O.) special reports Gen. Garfield as saying that the President's southern policy will not hurt the Republican party so much as his anti-politics order. The argument used is that President Hayes, after receiving from the Republican party all it can bestow, is now endeavoring to destroy all the methods by which the party has kept itself in vital organization. This feeling, if it gains ground, will break Hayes down.

WORKINGMEN'S MOVEMENT IN OHIO

A Tribune Cincinnati special says the workingmen will hold a county convention Aug. 18th. They will make no proposition to Republicans or Democrats, but put up a communistic platform and nominate their own ticket. The Democrats fear them more than Republicans.

A Tribune Columbus (O.) special says the workingmen's movement is formidable in that city and in the state. A meeting to nominate a county ticket will be held to-day.

Correspondence is going on between the leaders here and in other manufacturing points in Ohio. The movement is extending to farmers. They expect to carry Cincinnati and Hamilton Co.

It is claimed that the new organization will control the legislature and elect Stanley Matthews' successor.

MOVEMENT FOR A NEW NATIONAL PARTY.

A Times Philadelphia special says an effort is making to organize a national workingmen's party and foment trouble.

A mass meeting has been called. It is possible another strike may be planned.

BAILING SCRANTON VIGILANTS.

A Herald Wilkesbarre dispatch reports that twenty-five Scranton vigilants were bailed yesterday. The court room was crowded with the worst characters, muttering vengeance.

ABOUT THE KANAWHA VALLEY STRIKES.

A Herald Green Brier (West Va.) dispatch says the striking coal miners of Kanawha Valley were notified that their places will be filled if they don't return to work by Aug. 10th. Trouble is feared. The miners are ordered to vacate the company's houses, and writs of ejectment has been issued.

The governor, with the Chesapeake & Ohio railroad officials, are now visiting the disaffected regions.

AMERICAN OFFICERS IN TURKISH ARMY.

A Herald cable dispatch says it is rumored that American officers are commanding the Egyptian contingent.

At Plevna the Egyptians showed astonishing courage.

THE DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM IN VIRGINIA.

A Herald Richmond (Va.) dispatch says the platform of the Democratic convention is a meaningless and vapid manifesto. Before final adjournment, a resolution endorsing President Hayes was received with applause, but in consequence of the late hour was not debated or adopted.

It is reported that Mahone and Halliday have an understanding that the former will be chosen U. S. senator in 1879.

THE MISSISSIPPI JETTIES SUCCESSFUL.

A Washington special says the U. S. Engineer at the South Pass of the Mississippi reports the channel deepening continually. Capt. Eades will be soon entitled to another installment of his half million.

OHIO ANTI-HAYES REPUBLICANS.

It is understood the Ohio anti-Hayes Republicans will vote only for county and local officers, and in no way support the state ticket.

THE PRESIDENT'S PRUDENTIAL ADVICE.

The President has requested that there be no great display during his New Hampshire visit. He thinks when many people find so much trouble to obtain bread, it would not be in good taste to spend large sums entertaining the President.

SITTING BULL'S SURRENDER MUST BE ENTIRE.

A Times special says the government will only accept an entire surrender from Sitting Bull's hostiles. If Gen. Sherman will not act as one of the commission, Gen. Miles or Gen. Crook may. Little confidence in the result is felt.

A STRANGE RAILROAD CHARGE.

The Baltimore and Ohio railroad presents a claim for transporting U. S. troops from Washington to different points along its line to protect it from the strikers. No other road has made such a charge. The matter is referred to the attorney general.

IMPORTANT AFFIDAVIT MISSING.

An important affidavit relating to McKee's connection with the St. Louis whisky frauds is missing from the files of the attorney general's office. It was signed by Col. Maguire. He denies abstracting it, and offers to furnish a copy.

CABINET MEMBERS [illegible].

Secretary Schurz thinks that no member of the cabinet will take an active part in political discussion in the Ohio campaign. Secretary Sherman only intends to speak on financial questions. Secretary Schurz said he would like to speak himself on the Indian policy. There can be no objection to speech on government business.

MRS. CHISOLM'S EMBARRASSMENT.

A letter from the widow of Judge Chisolm, the victim of the Kemper county, Miss. massacre, says the probate court of that county has refused to settle up her husband's estate. She is thus prevented from leaving the scene of the butchery of her family.

THE UTAH SURVEYOR GENERALSHIP.

The Herald reports that the President has decided to make no change in the office of surveyor general of Utah until Jan. 1st. Kimball will be retained in deference to the wishes of Gov. Morton and Secretary Thompson.

A NOVEL SUIT.

Charles Heydiman brings a civil and criminal action against Peter Schmidt, alleging that the latter has eloped with the former's wife, taking most of Heydiman's money and household goods.

HURRICANE AT CONEY ISLAND.

A hurricane did much damage at Coney Island yesterday. The new Manhattan railroad depot was wrecked. Loss $8,000.

EUROPEAN SHIPMENTS TO-DAY.

Only three ocean steamers sail to-day. The freights show a large falling off, which is attributed to an advance in ocean freight rates, and to the fact that the farmers are holding back products for higher prices.

The shipments to-day include 136,000 bushels of grain, 45,000 boxes of cheese, and 6,200 packages of butter. The fresh beef shipment is the smallest recorded. It was only 800 quarters.

AIDING LABORERS TO WORK.

Chicago, Aug. 11.

Leading business men are contributing to employ laboring men on the public thoroughfares. Funds are subscribed to afford a hundred men one week's work.

A REPORT DENIED.

Cincinnati, Aug. 11.

The story that Secretary Sherman comes to investigate a charge of revenue frauds against Mr. Bishop, Democratic candidate for governor, is false.
