A BRIDGE DISASTER

FRANK W. ALLEN, OF HOUNSFIELD, NARROWLY ESCAPES DEATH

FIVE WORKMEN WERE KILLED

He Was Assistant Engineer in the Construction of the Willis Avenue Drawbridge—The Collapse of a Derrick Crushed Three Men Who Were Working Under His Charge.

Frank W. Allen, son of L. F. Allen, of East Hounsfield, and brother of L. L. Allen, of the Times, had just jumped from a platform to a float on the Harlem river Tuesday afternoon when a huge traveling derrick fell, smashing the platform and killing the three workmen with whom he had been standing a moment before. The New York papers report nine seriously, as having been slightly injured or having finally escaped.

Mr. Allen is a civil engineer, having for several years been engaged on public works in New York, a part of the time in connection with the city government, before Tammany returned to power. For several months he has been the assistant engineer in the work of constructing a drawbridge over the Harlem river at Willis avenue, the chief being Civil Engineer Jean D. Tate, formerly of the R., W. & O. R. R. system. The New York Sun gives the following account of the accident:

A big traveling derrick used in building temporary structures for the new Willis avenue drawbridge over the Harlem river fell into the river yesterday afternoon, carrying with it a lot of men, four of whom were killed and seven injured. There were 30 employed on the trestle work and piers at the time, and more than 20 fell into the river, but half of them were fished out uninjured. The accident was caused by the settling of some of the piles supporting the structure on which the derrick ran. This started the end of the track down and slid the machine off into the water.

The bridge, when constructed, will connect First avenue and Willis avenue. The contract for its construction was given to John C. Rogers, of 431 East One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street. Rogers sub-let the contract for the iron work of the bridge to the Edgemoor Bridge company, of Wilmington, Del. The two piers on the Willis avenue side of the river have already been constructed, one about 200 feet farther out in the stream than the other. A temporary trestle now connects the shore with the nearer pier, and about a week ago the bridge company began to build another temporary trestle between the two piers preparatory to putting up the permanent ironwork. This trestle was about 20 feet high and was made of extra heavy timbers. The bottom at that part of the river was found to be very treacherous, and the piles to support the framework were driven to an unusual depth. All but about 40 feet of the trestle had been completed yesterday morning and an extra force of men had been put on. This part of the work was to have been finished by tonight.

The derrick used was of unusual proportions. It was about 40 feet high, made of 12 by 14 inch timbers, and had two arms to lift stone and material from boats in the river. To get at this material it was run to the extreme end of the structure. It weighed all told about 14 tons and ran on three rails laid along the trestle work.

Yesterday afternoon the men had just finished at 2 o'clock a section of the trestle work and, after laying the rails, had pushed the heavy machine out over the newly finished part. About this time three masons under a foreman went back to work, putting the finishing touches to the masonry of the outer pier. The men were William and Walter Delaney, father and son, and Thomas Grady, a helper. They were along down the inner side of the stonework on a scaffolding and were in charge of Frank Allen, an engineer of Rogers, the contractor. The men on the trestle had just got the derrick into place on the outer edge of the trestle about 2:20 o'clock. When a tremor went through the entire lumber structure as the piles just under the derrick began to settle. This in a moment had slanted the tracks down forward and the ponderous machine rolled over the steadying blocks and fell forward into the river, carrying with it the newly finished section of the trestle on which many of the men were still working. The top of the machine just reached the stone pier and carried down the scaffold on which the masons were. Allen had just dropped onto a float as the thing fell and escaped uninjured.

The moment the derrick fell a lot of tugs in the neighborhood began to whistle an alarm. Those nearest pushed up into the wreckage, and their crews began dragging men out of the water. Many were in danger of drowning, but the ready tugs saved them. Police Capt. Martens, of the Alexander avenue station arrived finally with the reserves and ambulances from the Harlem and J. Hood Wright hospitals. The ambulances could not get anywhere near the scene. When the police and surgeons did arrive men were clambering up out of the wreckage, and for a long time it could not be ascertained just who had been killed.

S. C. Wolf, of 345 East One Hundred Thirty-sixth street, the foreman of the men who were on the edge of the trestle-work, was hauled out by a man on a lighter with a bad wound on his neck. Edward Brooks, who was just at the edge of the trestle-work and had been carried over by the derrick, saw when he came to the surface a man struggling in a lot of wreckage. Brooks was uninjured, and got to the man just as he was about to drown. The two were pulled out by others and, after being attended by the ambulance surgeons, went home. The seven who were badly hurt were taken to the Harlem hospital. It was some time before the bodies of those killed were discovered. The body of James Battle was finally found pinned between two heavy timbers. It was badly crushed and almost unrecognizable. Shortly afterward the searchers near the outer pier found the body of the elder Delaney, also badly crushed. It was two hours before any other bodies were discovered, and it was believed that quite a number had lost their lives. The timekeeper of the bridge company finally called the roll of the names of those employed on the trestle, and it was found that of these Battle was the only one killed. The bodies of the two other masons were found later buried in the wreckage near the stone pier. Both men, in all probability, had been crushed by the iron top of the derrick as it fell against the pier. The list of the dead and injured is as follows.

DEAD.

James Battle, bridge carpenter, of One Hundred Twenty-ninth street and Third avenue.

William Delaney, aged 60, mason, of 121 East One Hundred Ninth street.

Delaney Walter aged 22, mason, of 121 East 109th street.

Thomas Grady, helper, residence unknown.

INJURED.

Walter Genes, 136 Willis avenue, contusions on head and face.

G. M. Irving, 170 Willis avenue, right arm broken, contusions on body.

James Perry, 671 East One Hundred Thirty-fourth street, left arm fractured, right foot crushed and contusions on body.

Simon Meda, 671 East One Hundred Thirty-fourth street, lacerations on head and wrist fractured.

S. C. Wolf, 345 East One Hundred Thirty-sixth street, lacerated wound on neck.

Parsley is the only one of the injured who is likely to die. The police arrested J. S. Hedrick of 107 Willis avenue, who was the superintendent of the trestle work. He made no statement. He was locked up in the Alexander avenue station. Exaggerated reports of the number killed and injured spread through the neighborhood and brought a crowd of the wives and relatives of the workmen. The police refused to let any one pass through the gate. The crowd at last became so great that lines had to be drawn a block away to keep them away from the ambulances. Neither the coroner nor the police could fix the responsibility for the disaster. Coroner Lynch learned that the piles supporting the trestlework had been driven by Rogers, the contractor, although the other part of the structure was erected by the bridge company. If it was found that the piles had not been driven according to the specifications, other arrests might be made, he said.

The New York Herald reports the arrest of Contractor Rogers as follows:

Contractor John C. Rogers, who was constructing the Willis avenue bridge, where five men lost their lives, was arrested last night on a warrant issued by Coroner Lynch. Mr. Rogers was released on a $5,000 bond.

James S. Hendricks, of Roanoke, Va., the superintendent in charge, was arraigned in the Morrisania police court yesterday. He was held in $5,000 bail to appear before the coroner at the inquest on April 27.

Charles Parsley, one of the seven who were injured, died in Harlem hospital, making the death list five. The other injured men, the doctors say, will recover.

The question of responsibility for the accident will receive a careful sifting at the inquest.

Coroner Lynch said yesterday that he still thought the cause of the accident lay in the sagging of the piling, which had not been driven sufficiently deep to give it a good hold.

H. F. Lofland, assistant engineer of construction of the Edgemoor Bridge company, of Wilmington, Del., came here yesterday to look into the accident. The structure which fell was wholly under the control of the bridge company, for which concern Contractor J. C. Rogers had engaged to do the iron work.

The piling, however, was driven by Rogers, but the Rogers people say that in this they merely acted as agents for the bridge company. The work they did was under the inspection of a bridge company inspector.

John C. Rogers said yesterday:

"The part of the false structure which fell was not braced sufficiently. Timber lay all about, and this timber, upon which was a crane 56 feet high, was used to draw joists, beams and planks up to the spot where they were needed.

"My belief is that some heavy piece of timber had been dragged quickly up by the crane and that it struck under the top of the false structure, causing it to give way."

Supt. Tate, of the J. C. Rogers office, said he thought some part of the crane broke.

WATERTOWN MARKETS.

Increased Receipts of Eggs and Prices Decline—Potatoes Firm — Light Make of Maple Sugar.

Friday, April 14.

Receipts of eggs show a considerable increase today and prices have weakened. Thirteen cents was the top price paid and later in the day sellers were offering stock at 12 cents.—Butter is fairly steady at 16 cents for the best of the offering.—Potatoes hold firm, 60 cents being the ruling price paid producers. Few large lots remain unsold in farmers' hands and the country roads are not in condition to permit delivery of stock. Supplies are limited in grocers' hands and demand is brisk.—Onions and cabbage are about out of the market, so far as the local supply is concerned. Grocers are sending to other markets for these vegetables.—In meats no changes are noted. Fowls are plenty at 8 cents per pound, live weight. Pork is in good supply at $4.50 to $5, the latter price for prime light weights.—Hay is meeting a good demand under light receipts, $7 being the ruling price.—Receipts of maple sugar and syrup have not been large, and nearby makers do not expect to produce much more this season. In the larger sugar orchards in Lewis county, where there is yet much snow and considerable frost in the ground, the season will hold out longer, but at the best a light make now seems certain. Purchases of sugar this week have ranged from 8 to 10 cents, the bulk at 9 cents. Syrup has ranged from 60 to 75 cents, the bulk at 65 cents.

Indian River Grange.

Antwerp, April 14.—On account of the bad roads and rain there was a small attendance at the meeting of Indian River grange last Saturday. The worthy lecturer, Mrs. E. M. Beaman, being the highest officer present, called the meeting to order and presided in an able and dignified manner. The regular and necessary business of the grange was transacted. The literary program was omitted, as several who were present were anxious to attend the annual meeting of the cemetery association at E. R.

The Montreal Gazette says of Wednesdays' transactions in cheese: The cheese market was firm in tone and further business was noted, amounting to some 800 boxes at 11c and a fraction more. It is understood also that other lots were under negotiations.

A BIG POULTRY ESTABLISHMENT AT DENMARK, LEWIS COUNTY

To Keep 1,000 Hens—Eggs Shipped to Boston—Cheese Factory News—Castorland Milk Station to Make Cheese.

Lowville, April 14.—D. B. and E. Dunham, of Denmark, have placed an incubator in their hennery and have purchased a quantity of pure blooded White Leghorn eggs of Henry Van Dresser of Cobleskill. They have 400 hens at present and are continually increasing the number. All of their eggs are shipped to Boston. They intend by fall to have a 1,000 hens, and have one of the finest poultry houses in this section or even in northern New York. It is their purpose to keep nothing but White Leghorns in the future, as they are great egg producers.

It has been good sugar weather this week and a large run of sap is reported in this vicinity.

George Harding, of Lorraine, has bought the cheese factory at Pinckney Corners of Edward Finn and has taken possession of the same.

The Langher cheese factory in Copenhagen will commence operations for the season next Monday, with Wallace Kames as maker.

S. L. Hitchey, manager of the milk station at Castorland, has had orders to make the milk into cheese and not send on any milk at present to New York. He is making 11 cheese a day of 40 pounds weight.

NEW YORK PRODUCE MARKET REVIEW.

This morning's New York Commercial Bulletin gives the following review of the produce market:

Thursday evening, April 13.

Butter.

Had it not been for the accumulation from previous receipts the market might have steadied today under the influence of light receipts; but there was more butter offering than the trade required, and more or less weakness was shown. As a rule sellers tried to hold the price of strictly extra western creamery at 21c; but the offerings could not all be sold at that figure, and there was occasional shading of ½c. Firsts declined to 20c, and there was very quiet trading at that. Seconds and thirds are not over-plenty, but are having only a moderate demand. Quite a good deal of state creamery has come in this week, and it has shown wide range in quality, with very little strictly fancy; 20@20½c is now the general wholesale rate, with some very nice stock going at 19@19½c. The interest in state dairy butter continues small, and while receipts do not increase much prices are easing off a little; it is very difficult to exceed 19c for selections of half-firkin tubs, and that figure is a full outside rate for best Welsh. Quite a good deal of dairy butter is going in range of 17@18c.

Cheese.

The receipts showed up somewhat larger today, including several further lots of new cheese, mostly small sizes, though a few large cheese. The demand for new cheese continues slow, quality rarely being desirable, few lots being properly cured, and dealers as a rule prefer old cheese. There is little if any change in the situation of old cheese; here is a continued fair demand from both local and out-of-town sources, and the market in good healthy shape for all desirable grades. A lot of 300 boxes of September large white, that had been held in the interior, but owned by Eastern parties, which had been offering on this market, have been withdrawn and ordered into storage. We hear of an exporter making some inquiries on the market but without resulting in actual business.

Eggs.

Under very light receipts and continued strong western advices the market shows further advance.

Potatoes.

Domestic potatoes are in fair demand and held steadily at full late prices; Scotch held with confidence.

Hops.

There is no improvement whatever in business on either export or home trade account, and values gradually soften under the influence of pressure of comparatively small lots for sale in the interior markets. The statistical position, as generally understood, is seemingly without the slightest effect upon the market, although unusually strong.

Beans and Peas.

More export orders for Marrow beans were out today but there was competition to fill them, and the price was $1.45 quite generally; some very fancy lots were jobbed at $1.47½. Medium held about steady, but only the choicest quality reach $1.37½. Pea are unchanged with general sales at $1.32½. Red Kidney have declined to $1.75, at which several West India orders were filled. White Kidney exceedingly quiet. Yellow Eye dull. Green Peas slow and easy.
