Heyday in 1920's

Fiery Crosses, Lively Meetings

Marked North Ku Klux Klan

The Ku Klux Klan, which today is so much in the news, had its day in northern New York in the 1920's. The Klan began its northern New York "heyday" when a unit was formed in Adames in August, 1921. The organization held its first public meeting on Labor Day in September, 1923, at Adames making an appearance at the Catholic Bicentennial celebration. The latter created such a furor in the community that the Catholic Bicentennial celebration was altered in an attempt to quiet the马上就成立的 Ku Klux Klan. It was called the Northern New York Ku Klan or Knights and Ladies of the Blue Cross.

The organization held its first public meeting on Labor Day in 1921 at Adams. Making an appearance at the Catholic Bicentennial celebration, the organization was met with such a furor in the community that the Catholic Bicentennial celebration was altered in an attempt to quiet the Ku Klux Klan. It was called the Northern New York Ku Klan or Knights and Ladies of the Blue Cross.

The organization held its first public meeting on Labor Day in 1921 at Adams, making an appearance at the Catholic Bicentennial celebration. The latter created such a furor in the community that the Catholic Bicentennial celebration was altered in an attempt to quiet the Ku Klux Klan. It was called the Northern New York Ku Klan or Knights and Ladies of the Blue Cross.

The organization held its first public meeting on Labor Day in 1921 at Adams, making an appearance at the Catholic Bicentennial celebration. The latter created such a furor in the community that the Catholic Bicentennial celebration was altered in an attempt to quiet the Ku Klux Klan. It was called the Northern New York Ku Klan or Knights and Ladies of the Blue Cross.

The organization held its first public meeting on Labor Day in 1921 at Adams, making an appearance at the Catholic Bicentennial celebration. The latter created such a furor in the community that the Catholic Bicentennial celebration was altered in an attempt to quiet the Ku Klux Klan. It was called the Northern New York Ku Klan or Knights and Ladies of the Blue Cross.

The organization held its first public meeting on Labor Day in 1921 at Adams, making an appearance at the Catholic Bicentennial celebration. The latter created such a furor in the community that the Catholic Bicentennial celebration was altered in an attempt to quiet the Ku Klux Klan. It was called the Northern New York Ku Klan or Knights and Ladies of the Blue Cross.