Job for the Fool Killer. At a high school speaking contest in Saranac Lake a panic was caused among the audience of several hundred persons by the ringing of an automatic fire gong, after having removed the light plugs so that the bells leading to the exits could not be lighted. The panic was finally unduly moved by calmness, for at the sound of the alarm they promptly and quickly started out in five drill formation and exclamations of heads prevented a stampede. Some women fainted and others crowded out upon the fire escapes. The alarm was a false one supposed to have been perpetrated as a joke by school boys, but it was a most dangerous and foolhardy experiment, worthy of the severest punishment.
