President, in his annual message to Congress...

Washington. President Roosevelt, in a brilliant message Friday night, sounded a denunciation of both foreign beligerents and of critics of the New Deal...

His attack on domestic critics of the New Deal, likewise unnamed except as determined groups seeking to regain domination of the government...

White Mr. Roosevelt himself named no names, some observers speculated that in portions of his address he was referring to the American Liberty League...

His brief reference to fiscal and legislative affairs, the President asserted that business prospects were good...

Only once was there a clear and definite break in the Republican silence. That came at the end of his address...

Republicans condemned the message as a political speech, although few forecasted criticism of the neutrality section.

Democrats for the most part praised it as a strong message. In the listening audience were three who have been prominently mentioned as possible Republican opponents...

These listening for political implications certainly were not disappointed. After dispatching the neutrality question, the President quickly challenged his critics to seek "complete repeal" of the long list of New Deal enactments.

"This way is open to such a proposition," he added. "Let these challenges be met. If this is what these gentlemen want, let them say so to the Congress of the United States..."

Democratic praise and sharp Republican criticism Friday night greeted President Roosevelt's annual message to Congress.

Democrats commended especially the President's neutral references and his defense of the New Deal. Republicans attacked parts of the address as "political harangues" although voicing little criticism of the neutrality sections.

Chairman Henry P. Fletcher of the Republican National Committee: "Aside from the neutrality feature of the address, the speech was what we expected it to be. It did not give to the Congress information of the state of the Union nor recommend to their consideration any measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient."

NEW PAIN DEADENER FOUND, BOON TO PATIENT AND DENTIST

New York. A literal meaning may soon be given that ominous dental admonition to "open wider, please; this isn't going to hurt — much."

Columbia University announces discovery of a revolutionary and harmless pain-deadener by Dr. Leroy L. Hartman, professor of dentistry in the school of dental and oral surgery.

Medical claims attached to the new dental anesthetic state it is expected to revolutionize the practice of dentistry by eliminating pain and that "filthy feeling in the preparation and filling of tooth cavities."

The new dental anesthetic perfected by Dr. Hartman after 20 years of research is described as a solution applied to the surface of the tooth, not only preventing pain, but also offering the possibilities of saving teeth now deemed to be lost through extraction.

Although full details were withheld, Dr. Hartman said the dental anesthetic is based on a new theory of pain and the recognition of a previously unknown substance in the dentin of the tooth.

It becomes effective in about one and a half minutes after application. It remains effective for 20 minutes to an hour.

It is to be patented and patent rights assigned to Columbia University, which will control price and quality so as to make it available for public use and to prevent commercial exploitation.

Dr. Hartman said the new dental anesthetic causes no after-effects as do certain other drugs and that it is as simple to use as the patient is not aware of its application.

Under the new theory, Dr. Hartman has succeeded in establishing the outer portion of the tooth, establishing a localized zone which reduces the sensations communicated to the nerves.

Further, just as insulin allows the patient to eat the ordinary amount of starchy foods—potatoes, sugar, bread—it has been found that he neither will suffer from the pernicious anemia patients eat or does not eat, the liver diet has this building up effect on the blood.

EATING LIVER REGULARLY

It is now generally known that eating liver regularly will build up the number of red corpuscles in the blood and greatly enrich them with iron.

This condition, pernicious anemia, which formerly was always fatal, can now be held in check in the great majority of cases just as can diabetes by the use of insulin.

Further, just as insulin allows the patient to eat the ordinary amount of starchy foods—potatoes, sugar, bread—it has been found that he neither will suffer from the pernicious anemia patients eat or does not eat, the liver diet has this building up effect on the blood.

Another valuable point is that it is not necessary to eat liver three times a day in amounts of one-quarter to half a pound at each meal, but if a little over a quarter pound—five to six ounces—is eaten in the 24 hours, the results are just as satisfactory as when the liver is eaten three times a day.

Naturally as the blood improves so do other conditions of the body, the kidneys filter out wastes and preserve useful substances, and the intestines do not allow materials to be broken out of the waste which are used to the body when properly digested.

In some studies by Dr. S. I. Sherman, Leningrad, and his associates, it was found that after the use of liver for three months neutral fat is digested 100 per cent while its absorption amounts to 87 per cent as compared with 8 per cent before the liver diet was given.
