portland cement, water and sand and a coarse aggregate, or make a mixture from portland cement, water and sand. For small jobs, use one of the pre-mixes which require only the addition of water.

Get a concrete mix which includes the coarse aggregate when the patch is large and may have to bear heavy weights. Get a sand mix for smaller patches and cracks on ordinary surfaces.

To protect your concrete after the repairs, mix equal parts of mineral spirits and boiled linseed oil and apply with a paint roller. It is best to apply two coats.

Q. I had an electric clock on my marble table and when we returned from a trip, we found the batteries had run down and left an acid stain on my table. I have tried everything that I could think of to remove the stain. Is there anything that will remove it? — Mrs. C., Chicago.

A. Removing stains from marble usually requires a poultice made by applying hydrogen peroxide (hair bleach strength) and a few drops of ammonia to a pad made by several thicknesses of white tissue paper. Lay this pad over the stained area and cover with plastic or pane of glass. Let this remain overnight and then rinse with clear water. Repeat the process if necessary.

Any etching caused by an acid substance can be removed by light wet sanding with No. 400 sandpaper, using parallel strokes. Then polish with marble hand polishing powder on a damp cloth. The polishing power is available at marble dealers.

Questions on building, home maintenance and repair may be sent to Here's How, Copley News Service, in care of this newspaper.
