GENERAL ITEMS.

Gen. Sherman has created a new department, to be called Arizona, and to embrace the territory of that name, and so much of California as lies south of a line from the north-east corner of Arizona, with headquarters at Fort Whipple, or at Prescott, Arizona. Brevet-Maj.-Gen. Geo. Stoneman is assigned to the command of this new department.

—The Post-office authorities are to be congratulated on having at last put forth an unobjectionable three-cent postage-stamp. It is larger than the miserable blue patches now in vogue, is of a very handsome green tint, bears the profile head of Washington, and is distinguished by a neat simplicity, most commendably in contrast with the terrible conglomerations of scrolls, pin-wheels, locomotives, antique clam-shells, and other devices which gave the issue just before this so tawdry an air. The department says, too, these new stamps will stick. Let us hope they may in more senses than one.—N. Y. Herald.

A Fisherman's Story.

ANGLING FOR A DOG.

We were traveling on ground we had no right on. The only excuse was like that of a military necessity—it was far better fishing through the farms where the trout had been preserved, than in open lots where all could fish.

It was early in the morning. We had risen at three, ridden ten miles, and struck the creek as the trout were ready for breakfast. Looking carefully for a sheltered place to hitch our horses, we slyly crept on behind fences, etc., till we reached the part of the stream not generally fished. A farm house stood not a quarter of a mile away. We saw the morning smoke curling lightly from a stove-pipe; saw a man and two boys come out to do chores; saw a woman busy about the door, and a ferocious bull-dog wandering about the yard.

If ever we fished close it was then. Not a whisper to disturb the birds or the owners of the land. We crawled through the grass and dodged behind clumps of elders, lifting large speckled beauties out of the water until our baskets were full.

This was the the time to have gone; but the trout were so large and bit so readily that we decided to string and hide what we had, and take another basketful. So at it we went. No sooner would the hook touch the water than it had a trout. We forgot the house, the man, the boys, and the dog. Suddenly there was a rushing through an oatfield as if a mad bull was coming. We looked toward the house, and saw the farmer and his two boys on a fence, the woman in the door, and the dog bounding toward us. We saw it all—we had been discovered! The well trained dog had been sent to hunt us out, and as the matter appeared, it was safe to bet that he was doing that thing right lively.

To outrun the dog was not to be thought of. There was no time to lose. He cleared a fence and came for us just as we reached a tree, and by great activity took a front seat on a limb above his reach. Here was a precious go! A vicious bull-dog under the tree, and the farmer and two big boys ready to move down upon our works. It was fight, foot-race, or faugs.

The farmer yelled to his dog, "Watch him, Tige!"

Tige proposed to do that little thing, and keeping his eyes upon us, seated himself under the tree.

Then spoke this ugly farmer man: "Just hold on thar, stranger, till we get breakfast; then we will come and see you! If you are in a hurry, however, you can go now. Watch him, Tige!"

We surmised trouble, quite too much, for thrice had that old man of bull-dogs and agriculture elegantly walloped innocent tourists for being seen on his suburban premises. His reputation as a peace man was not good and there arose a large heart toward our throat.

Time is the essence of contracts, and the saving ordinance of those in trouble. We had a stout line in our pocket, and a large hook intended for rock bass, if we failed to take trout. And as luck would have it, we had got a nice sandwich and a piece of boiled corn beef in our other pocket.

We called the dog put names, but he wasn't on it! Then we tried to move down, when he moved up! At last we trebled our bass line, fastened the limerick to it, baited it with corn beef, tied the end of the line to a limb, and angled for a dog.

Tige was in appetite. He swallowed it, and sat with his eyes on us for more; but with no friendly look beaming from his countenance. Not any!

Then he pulled gently on the line—it was fast! Tige yanked and pulled, but 'twas of no use!

We quickly slipped down the tree—almost blistering our hands doing it—seized our pole, and straightway went from thence somewhat lively.

We found our string of fish, and reached the buggy and a commanding spot in the road in time to see the sturdy yeoman move forth.

We saw him and his cohorts, male and female, move slowly, as if in no haste. We saw an anxious crowd engaged about the dog. We came quickly home and kindly left the bait, line and hook to the farmer.

MENTAL VAGARIES.—The landlord of a lodging-house which was burnt down not long ago is in much disgrace, because he forgot some people who lived at the top of the building, and was yet wide-awake enough to save his furniture and his plum-pudding. It is, of course, impossible for us to see into any one else's heart, but almost every thoughtful person must shrink from adnitting the idea that this could have been a case of sheer inhumanity—the inhumanity would be so horrible. But it may be some help towards charitable construction if we recall the fact that a suddenly disclosed fire in a dwelling house is a ludicrously demoralizing event. We know of a very good, elderly gentleman, an affectionate husband and father, who, upon a fire breaking out in his home, rushed across the road, and earnestly begged a friend who lived opposite to take care of—his night-cap! This is a fact as hard as the desk on which we are writing. In another case the unfortunate gentleman, who had children in the burning house, burst into tearful exclamations over the fate of his wine-cellar—the fire having broken out below. This fact is also within the direct knowledge of the writer of these lines. People have been known to throw glass and crockery out of a first or second floor window in order to save it, when human life and real valuables were in jeopardy. An old servant was dragged fainting from a house in flames. When she came to she said, "Thank God, I've saved this!" Now, what she had saved was a parlor-broom. The painful way in which a great fire is sometimes seen to affect horses, dogs, and birds is well known. The poet Gray was so absurdly nervous about fire that he used to be very much teased on that account. One night some of his fellow-collegians gathered under his window and shouted, "Fire, fire, fire!" Out plopped the fire escape which he always kept under his bed, and down came Gray into a large tub of water, which had been kindly put ready for him. It is not everybody who can be as cool as the Scotchman, who flung himself out of the sixth flat on hearing the cry of "Fire!" When he had got half way down he found there was no fire at all, but on seeing a friend on the third flat looking out of a window, said contemplatively, "Eh, Sandy, mon, sic a fa' as I will hae!"

The Legend of the Easter Eggs.

We presume none of our readers will find fault with us for republishing, at this time, Fitz James O'Brien's beautiful poem of the Easter Eggs, which we give below. Many will, and all should, cut it out and preserve it among their choicest "scraps:"

Trinity bells, with their hollow lungs,
Their vibrant lips and their brazen tongues,
Over the roofs of the city pour
Their Easter music with joyous roar,
Till the soaring notes to the sun are rolled
As he swings along in his path of gold.

"Dearest papa," says my boy to me,
As he merrily climbs on his father's knee,
"Why are those eggs that you see me hold
Colored so finely with blue and gold?
And what is the beautiful bird that lays
Such beautiful eggs on Easter Days?"

Tenderly shine the April skies,
Like laughter and tears in my child's blue eyes,
And every face in the street is gay.
Why cloud this youngster by saying nay?
So I cudgel my brains for the story he begs,
And tell him the tale of the Easter eggs.

"You have heard, my boy, of the One who died,
Crowned with keen thorns and crucified;
And how Joseph, the wealthy—whom God reward,
Cared for the corpse of his martyred Lord,
And piously tombed it within the rock
And closed the gate with a mighty block.

"Now, close by the tomb, a fair tree grew,
With pendulous leaves and blossoms of blue;
And deep in the green tree's shadowy breast
A beautiful singing bird sat on her nest,
Which was bordured with mosses like malachite
And held four eggs of an ivory white.

"Now, when the bird from her dim recess
Beheld the Lord in His burial dress,
And looked on the Heavenly face so pale,
And the dear feet pierced with the cruel nail,
Her heart nigh broke with a sudden pang,
And out of the depth of her sorrow she sang.

"All night long till the morn was up,
She sat and sang in her moss-wreathed cup,
A song of sorrow as wild and shrill
As the homeless wind when it roams the hill;
So full of tears, so loud and long,
That the grief of the world seemed turned to song.

"But soon there came, through the weeping night,
A glimmering auget, clothed in white;
And he rolled the stone from the tomb away,
Where the Lord of the Earth and the Heavens lay;
And Christ arose in the cavern's gloom
And in living lustre came from the tomb.

"Now the bird that sat in the heart of the tree,
Beheld the celestial mystery,
And its heart was filled with a sweet delight,
And it poured a song in the sobbing night;
Notes climbing note, till higher, higher,
They shoot to heaven like spears of fire.

"When the glittering, white-robed angel heard
The sorrowing song of that grieving bird,
And heard the following chant of mirth,
That hailed Christ risen from the earth,
He said, 'Sweet bird, be forever blest;
Thyself, thy eggs, and thy moss-wreathed nest.'

"And ever, my child, since that blessed night,
When death bowed down to the Lord of light,
The eggs of that sweet bird changed their line,
And burn with red, and gold, and blue;
Reminding mankind, in their simple way,
Of the holy marvel of Easter day."

AN ECCENTRIC CHARACTER.—In a picturesque valley among the Springfield Hills, in Union County, New Jersey, stands a straw-thatched hut, so small and mean that it would appear to be the residence of a dog rather than that of a human being. The hut is built almost entirely of straw, the few pieces of lumber used in its construction being the doors that open on each side. The interior is scarcely spacious enough for a man to turn, but within it lives a reputed scion of Prussian nobility, who has spent his days and nights here for the past two years. His name has not until recently been known to the people among whom his lot is so strangely cast, but he has been known far and near as the "German baron." Whether he is rightly named or not cannot be definitely known, but some papers, letters, &c., lately found in his hut, which bear the name of "Baron Erhardt," give confirmation to the rumor that he is the heir of a noble house. Fifteen years ago, according to the most trustworthy accounts, this remarkable individual came to this country, having been exiled from his home by political difficulties with the Prussian government. He is occasionally found wandering throug the woods of Union and Springfield towuships, but Mr. John P. Sayers, upon whose farm his hut is located, states that he has never been known to beg or steal. His hut is kept scrupulously clean—herbs, roots, corn, &c., constituting his diet. A black clay pipe, with a very poor quality of strong tobacco, is his only solace. He roams over hill and through dale, with pipe in mouth, walking with slow and measured steps, head drooping, hands crossed behind his back. In opinions he is a thorough sceptic, reposes no confidence in human nature, and, like Æsop,* believes he would require a lantern in daylight to enable him to find an honest man. Mr. David Mecker and the other farmers in the vicinity believe him to be an inoffensive old man, and are ever ready to do him an act of kindness.—World.

*The World knows classical literature if it knows anything, and yet we are inclined to think that it was Diogenes who wasted time and tallow in searching for honest men at noonday.—ED. PRESS.

THE AMERICAN COOKING STOVE.

Is steadily increasing in sales and in public favor, notwithstanding the numerous attempts to imitate its name, its design and various improvements, and to appropriate to itself from its great reputation. The people soon learn that they are deceived and swindled by these worthless imitations, and go back to the article of standard and well known value, and these mushroom imitations have their brief existence, and are heard of no more, whilst the AMERICAN pursues the even tenor of its way, and will continue to do so as long as Stoves continue to be necessary articles of household furniture.
