LOCKING THE TRUNK.

Mr. Spoonendyke's Painful Surprise After a Deadly Wreath with a Saratoga. From the Brooklyn Eagle.

"My dear," said Mrs. Spoonendyke, as she arose from her knees, hot and tired with packing, and rubbing the small of her back as she straightened up, "I'm all through now, and I wish you would lock this trunk."

"Certainly," replied Mr. Spoonendyke, dropping his paper and slamming down the key. "All you've got to do is just lift the hasp in the lock and turn the key. So?"

But the key didn't quite turn, and Mr. Spoonendyke hit the hasp with the side of his fist and tried it again.

"Don't it work?" asked Mrs. Spoonendyke, watching the proceeding with considerable interest.

"I'll work if you'll let it alone," said Mr. Spoonendyke severely, and he raised the lid, dropped it again, pounded the hasp and wrenched at the key with all his strength. "Stand back and give me room, can't you?" he growled, as he pressed down on the cover and gave the key quick twists in a vain effort to catch the lock unawares.

"Why don't you rest your weight on it and let me lock it?" asked Mrs. Spoonendyke, fluttering around her husband and wondering if he was thoroughly aware that his plug had been immediately under the lid.

"Have you got the time to keep away from this thing and let me work it?" demanded Mr. Spoonendyke, contemplating his wife with a Spartan expression of visage. "I can't do anything with you sitting on my elbow? If you'll go down cellar for a minute, I'll lock this trunk," said Mr. Spoonendyke, banging away at the hasp and breathing hard. But his best efforts could only turn the key half way.

"Oh! ain't I glad you couldn't lock it!" exclaimed Mrs. Spoonendyke, anxious to stay her husband's growing wrath. "I forgot to put in your walking cane."

"Don't gas the cane! spattered Mr. Spoonendyke. "I'm going to lock my case with a dog gasted walking canesticking out at one end? Who says I can't lock it? What's the reason I can't lock it?" and he stood off and fetched the hasp a tremendous kick.

"Anything else you've forgotten to put in?" and he sprang on the lid and tugged at the key with his head thrown back and his teeth set. "Got a couple of mirrors you want in here? Any china in the house that wants a ride in this trunk? Top floor who likes to play the fiddle? and he flopped off on the floor and banged at the hasp again.

"Let me sit on it," suggested Mrs. Spoonendyke, climbing up without waiting for a response. "Now try it." Mr. Spoonendyke fumbled around and worked at the hasp and key, but fruitlessly.

"Can't you sit any harder than that?" he yelled, as the key stuck and wouldn't turn either way. "Fraid of breaking the measly thing? Press down, can't you?"

Mrs. Spoonendyke squirmed around and said, "now dear," and then looked over to see how he was getting on, but still the lock was obstinate.

"Don't gas me! howled Mr. Spoonendyke, firing the key out the window and giving the trunk a farewell kick. "If you want it locked you get a blacksmith and a steam derrick," and Mr. Spoonendyke threw himself into a chair and pretended to bury himself in his paper.

"I don't know how we're ever going to get it open," said Mrs. Spoonendyke after a long silence.

"Get what open?" growled her husband.

"The trunk. Now I remember, its got a spring lock, and when you took the key out it locked itself. I don't suppose we can ever find the key."

"That's it!" yelled Mr. Spoonendyke. "You know all about it now! Why didn't you tell me it was a spring lock? Why'd you keep it to yourself?"

"I forgot," whimpered Mrs. Spoonendyke, "but it will be all right. I can open it."

"Oh, you can open it?" snorted Mr. Spoonendyke. "You're an opener. All you want is to be sharpened on both sides to be an oyster knife! With a dark lantern and a skull cap you'd make a full set of burglars' tools! Oh, yes, you'd open it! If you had a loose handle and one corner kicked off, you'd get rich as a serey driver!" and Mr. Spoonendyke tore out of the house to see if he could borrow something to pick open the unfortunate trunk.

"That gives me time to pack the valise," murmured Mrs. Spoonendyke, "and as I've got another key to the trunk, we'll do pretty well after all," and the worthy lady began to jam night shirts and hair oil into the bags, together with sandwiches and tooth brushes, wondering betimes whether Mr. Spoonendyke's silk hat had been so badly smashed that it wouldn't do to go fishing in on rainy days, even if it didn't look well enough for church.

The Marquis of Lorne in Manitoba. The Governor-General and suite broke up their first camp at the end of the western division of the Union Pacific railway, on August 9. In the evening camp was pitched at Boggie Creek. The party passed through "Big Plain," a district which is one of the most fertile in the world. This was evidenced by the waving fields of wheat which met the eye on either hand. The next day the party arrived at Rapid City. A large assemblage of citizens met the party. The Marquis of Lorne had conversed some time with the people, he was presented with an address, to which he made a happy, extempore reply.

The party left Rapid City on August 11, and reached Shoo Lake in the afternoon. Here they were received by Mr. Dewdney, Indian commissioner. On the 12th the party passed through Little, where an address was presented and a reply made. The party camped on the east bank of the Assiniboine river, four miles from Fort Ellice. The river was crossed and the party conducted into Fort Ellice. At 2 P. M. a council of Indians was held inside the fort. About 300 were in attendance. They are mostly Sissetons and Sioux. The Sioux carry a flag presented to them by the British government in 1812. The council lasted nearly four hours, a great many Indians speaking. The Marquis of Lorne addressed them a few words of advice and encouragement, and gave them some presents. The party would reach On Appelle on August 17. The testimony of the settlers as to the fertility of the country has been universal.

A LEAVENWORTH ROMANCE.

A Story of a Youthful Couple and an Indignant Mama. From the Leavenworth (Kansas) Times.

There was a lively scene of domestic trouble at the depot on Sunday afternoon as the Missouri Pacific train came in. An anxious mother was there to receive home an erring daughter who had left her paternal roof two months ago, a blushing maid of sweet sixteen and returned on Sunday a bride. When the train had stopped in the depot the mother ran up to the cars and scanned the features closely of every person who descended to the platform. At last her scrutiny was rewarded by a young girl, handsomely attired in a light traveling suit and a jaunty little hat that partially hid a wealth of golden curls, and shaded the dark, lustrous eyes that flashed defiantly on the lady, who received her with open arms, while unrestrainedly the tears flowed down her cheeks.

Then came another actor on the scene, a young man, apparently about 22 years of age who stepped up to the lady with an expectant air and stood by, a silent witness to the scene.

Suddenly the young girl turned to him and said: "Mamma, my husband!"

"Your husband?" exclaimed the astonished lady, "what! My child, my baby, married?"

"I told you I was going to marry him in my last letter, and you didn't answer it," cried the girl.

Without noticing the last remark, the angry mother walked up to the young man, and looking him over from head to foot with indescribable scorn, said: "How dare you take my baby, my only child, from me without my consent? You are a wretch, sir; and let me tell you, sir, you are not wanted in our family. My daughter will go home with me, and you just get for Illinois."

"But your daughter loves me," he protested, "and wrote for your consent, which you refused to give, and we could not live apart, madame. If you can not give us welcome, we will return to Illinois."

"No you won't," interrupted the mother. "My daughter will go home and you can go about your business."

Stepping up to the young lady, he placed his hand confidently on her arm and said defiantly: "Come, Nelly, I will protect you, and we will go where there is a warmer welcome for us."

The young girl wavered; she was in a delicate position, being compelled to choose between her mother and her newly-chosen husband. Finally, as if deciding to matter in her mind, she said: "No, Charlie, I guess ma is right. I'd better go home; I guess ma can write to me sometimes, won't you, Charlie? And maybe we can."

At this point she burst into tears, while the irate mother dropped her under jaw in a dejected manner, and wandered aimlessly after them. When last seen by officer Nicbaur they were going up Cherokee street, the young man following at a respectful distance behind. Whether the disappointed husband concluded to return to Illinois has not been ascertained, and he may be in the city yet endeavoring to get back his wife, who went home to her ma as a matter of choice, and why shouldn't she? She can get another husband, but she can never get another mother.

Woman's World. Here we have it, and it is thoroughly reliable-if correct. An Illinois justice has decided that "courting is a public necessity, and must not be interrupted; therefore if a young man wanted to kiss a girl he might put her father out of the room first if he liked."

The Boston Herald says that nothing is more disgusting than to see women effect a public devotion to their husbands which is only public and, perhaps, there is no phase of married life that is more closely watched. People cannot act well in public a part which they are not in the habit of acting at home.

I pass by her window daily; she looks out at me with a contentment. That much agitates me internally. And yet is infernally pleasant. At her window she sees, this supernatural she; Ah, why is my heart ever twitching? Her monogram she has been stitching.

Patti and her sister Charlotta are enemies. While the latter was lying at the point of death in a hospital of the Sisters of St. Joseph, Adeline was all the time in the neighborhood and sent not a single word of inquiry about her sister. It is said that when asked to attend the administration of the sacrament she refused, saying that she did not care whether Charlotta lived or died.

London Truth says that the best use to which a woman can be put is to be made the honest wife of some good man and the judicious mother of healthy children. All the art and learning that she can compass are not of so much value to the world as the example of a life passed quietly in the exercises of social duty and domestic righteousness, in the gift to the country of children who shall carry on the national traditions of courage and generosity, of unselfishness and virtue.

A Man's Name in the Bench. From the Chicago Inter-Ocean. A transcript of the evidence in a "woman case" which was appealed to the Supreme Court of Indiana contains the following paragraphs. It seems the woman was giving her testimony, and the clerk thus records it: Question-"Was the defendant present at the time?" Answer-"No." Here the witness began to sob and cry bitterly.

Question-"Did you see him about that time?" Answer-"No." Here the witness threw herself down on the floor, yelled, howled, and walloped herself around until she had to be carried out of the room.

When the judges read this transcript it is said one of them remarked: "If that clerk wants to see a woman walloper herself around and raise the ceiling of the house, he ought to catch a sight of my wife when she is in one of her tantrums. Gentlemen, I'm not fit to pass on this case. I'm for the man, up and down, in spite of the d--!"

A Negro's Terrible Deed. A special from Atlanta says a whole family was murdered last Tuesday night, in Terrell county, Ga. Frank Hudson, a negro, went to the farm house of Daniel Lee, after the family had retired, and told Lee that his woods were on fire and fences burning. He went out with Lee, but soon returned with an ax in his hand. He demanded supper of Mrs. Lee. She refused, saying supper was over. He fell on his knees, crying, "I'm killing her, house I'm killing her." They heard the house was on fire. Mrs. Lee led both with the ax and left them for dead.

Hudson found $500 in the house and took it and fled. One girl was killed and the other only stunned. Lee was found dead in the woods near the house, with his head split open. Hudson was captured and jailed at Albany. The military have been called out to prevent the mob from lynching him.

Uncle Josh at Home. Denham Thompson-Uncle Josh-lives in West Swanzy, New-Hampshire. It is his native village. He has a pretty two-story-and-a-half house and barn, surrounded by nine acres of land. His father, seventy-six years old, lives in a cottage near by. Uncle Josh can be found any day driving about town, clad in a business suit of blue with a big diamond sparkling in his shirt front. His house is filled with pretty pictures and and birds chirp and carol from nooks in the piazzas. Up stairs is a hall, in which Uncle Josh says he goes to dance when his dancing days on the stage are over. Uncle Josh called the attention of a visitor the other day to an old lady watering flowers from the veranda of the neighboring cottage. "That's my mother," he said. "She's seventy-four years old and smart as a cricket. She and father are going to be married over the 15th of August-their golden wedding celebration. Jogging along side by side for fifty years; pleasant to think of, isn't it? Would like to have you come down; perhaps you will see father out the pigeon wing, although he is seventy-six. He used to be a master at it in his younger days."

Nothing definite nor indeed satisfactory has been discovered to account for the death of the Cramer girl in New Haven. The coroner's jury has been loading itself with a good deal of mystery, but it is believed that no clear light has been thrown on the tragedy. The more there is said about it in the locality the more probable does it appear that either the Malleys or the girl Douglas, all three were indirectly connected with the girl's disappearance. A theory held by many who know the way in which these young people spent a considerable of their time is that they were all intoxicated and that the Cramer girl wandered away from the rest of them, and falling into the water was unable to help herself out.
