THE BATTLE MONUMENT AT WEST POINT.

Gen. McClellan's Oration.

The following is the concluding portion of the eloquent oration delivered by Gen. McClellan, on the interesting occasion of laying the foundation stone of the Battle Monument at West Point, on Wednesday, June 15, 1864:

THE CAUSE FOR WHICH WE FIGHT.

But what is the honorable and holy cause for which these men have laid down their lives, and for which the nation still demands the sacrifice of the precious blood of so many of her children?

Soon after the close of the Revolutionary War, it was found that the confederacy which had grown up during that memorable contest, was falling to pieces from its own weight. The central power was too weak. It could recommend to the different states such measures as seemed best and it possessed no real power to legislate, because it lacked the executive force to compel obedience to its laws. The national credit and self respect had disappeared, and it was feared by the friends of human liberty throughout the world that ours was but another added to the long list of fruitless attempts at self-government. The nation was evidently on the brink of ruin and dissolution when some eighty years ago many of the wisest and most patriotic of the land met to seek a remedy for the great evils which threatened to destroy the great work of the revolution. The sessions were long and often stormy; for a time the most sanguine doubted the possibility of a successful termination of their labors. But from amidst the conflict of sectional interests, of party prejudice and of personal selfishness, the spirit of wisdom and conciliation at length evoked the Constitution under which we have lived so long. It was not formed in a day; but was the result of practical labor, of lofty wisdom, and of the purest patriotism. It was at last adopted by the people of all the states—although by some reluctantly—not as being exactly what all desired, but the best possible under the circumstances.

It was accepted as giving us a form of government under which the nation might live happily and prosper, so long as the people should continue to be influenced by the same sentiments which actuated those who formed it; and which would not be liable to destruction from internal causes, so long as the people preserved a recollection of the miseries and calamities which led to its adoption. Under this beneficial constitution the progress of the nation was unsurpassed in history. The rights and liberties of its citizens were secured at home and abroad; vast territories were rescued from the control of the savages and the wild beasts, and added to the domain of the Union and civilization. The arts, the sciences, and commerce grew; our flag floated upon every sea, and we took our place among the great nations of the earth. But under this smooth surface of prosperity upon which we glided so swiftly, with all the sails set before the common breeze, dangerous reefs were hidden which now and then cause ripples upon the surface, and made anxious and more careful pilots. Elated by success, the ship swept on—the crew not heeding the warnings they received, forgetful of the dangers escaped at the beginning of the voyage, and blind to the hideous maelstrom, which gaped to receive them. The same elements of discord sectional prejudices, interests and institutions which had rendered the formation of the Constitution so difficult, threatened more than once to destroy it. But for a long time the nation was so fortunate as to possess a series of political leaders, who to the highest abilities, united the same spirit of conciliation which animated the founders of this republic, and thus for many years the threatened evils were averted. Time, and the long continuance of good fortune, obliterated the recollection of the calamities of years preceding the adoption of the Constitution. They forget that conciliation, common interests, and mutual charity had been the foundation, and must be the support of our government, and all the relations of life. At length, men appeared with sectional and personal prejudices and interests, outweighing all considerations of the general good. Extremists of one section furnished the occasion, eagerly seized as a pretext by equally extreme men in the other, for abandoning the pacific remedies afforded by the Constitution. Stripped of all sophistry and side-issues, the direct cause of the war as it presented itself to the honest and patriotic citizens of the North was simply this:

Certain States, or rather a portion of the inhabitants of certain States, feared, or professed to fear, that injury would result to their rights and property from the elevation of a particular party to power. Although the Constitution and the actual condition of the government provided them with a peaceable and sure protection against the apprehended evil, they prepared to seek security in the destruction of the government which could protect them, and in the use of force against national troops holding a national fortress. To efface the insult offered to our flag, to save ourselves from the fate of the divided republics of Italy and South America; to preserve our government from destruction; to enforce its just power and laws; to maintain our very existence as a nation. These were the causes which impelled us to draw the sword. Rebellion against a government like ours, which contains within itself the means of self-adjustment and a pacific remedy for evils, should never be confounded with a revolution against despotic power, which refuses redress of wrongs. Such a rebellion cannot be justified upon ethical grounds, and the only alternatives for our choice are its suppression or the destruction of our nationality.

At such a time as this, and in such a struggle, political partisanship should be merged in a true and brave patriotism, which thinks only of the good of the whole country. It was in this cause and with these motives that so many of our comrades have given their lives, and to this we are all personally pledged in all honor and fidelity. Shall such devotion as that of our dead comrades be of no avail? Shall it be said in after-ages that we lacked the vigor to complete the work thus begun? That after all these noble lives freely given, we
