THE PROHIBITORY SENTIMENT

Pervading the country is due in great measure to the large amount of spurious Whiskey that is being sold. Imposed upon by irresponsible dealers who doctor and color up spirits to represent Whiskey, consumers are retaliating by voting to wipe out the entire business. To aid in checking this sentiment by supplying consumers with a pure Whiskey I am now placing my celebrated "I. W. HARPER OLD NELSON COUNTY KY WHISKEY" direct to them from distillery warehouse.

This Whiskey is made from selected rye, and corn and barley malt at my distillery in Nelson County, Ky., and represents the highest type of distillation.

As a stimulant or tonic it is prescribed by the leading physicians.

As a beverage it will recommend itself to the most exacting connoisseur. Respectfully

I. W. HARPER.

BLACK BASS BY NIGHT.

Lake Keuka Fishermen Have a Singular Way of Catching Them.

Black bass fishing by night during the fall is a sport peculiar to Lake Keuka, it being the belief of the fishermen along the lake, which results would seem to justify, that the biggest black bass do their feeding at night during that season. The bass evidently have peculiar ideas, too, about what they are willing to try in the way of something to eat at night. In fishing for black bass during the day the angler on Keuka is particular to have the choicest of live bait—minnows, crawfish or dobson. Minnows are the bait most used.

The fisherman drifts slowly in his boat along the shores, following the curves of the quiet coves and rounding the many points that jut into the lake on both sides. He keeps his line in about twenty feet of water, and uses no sinker, or, if any, a light one. The bait must be constantly lively on the hook, or the bass will not come near it. At night the fisherman seeks places where the water is forty or fifty feet deep. Instead of a single hook and a live bait he uses a gang of at least ten hooks, tied in pairs an inch apart. They are tied to strong gut, and are but little larger than an ordinary trout fly hook. The bait used is golden shiner, which is caught in the lake. It is hooked to the gang at the lip and tail, in a curve, so that when it is trolled through the water the bait will whirl, the shiner, of course, being dead. Where the leader, six feet long, and the line are joined another line is attached. This is six or eight feet long. To its pendant end is attached a half pound lead sinker. This is let to the bottom. The gang and shiner play in the water the length of the sinker line above the bottom. This rig is used at the end of 150 feet of line. The boat drifts or is rowed very slowly.

The black bass that are caught by this peculiar tackle in the great depth of water where it is used are always immense specimens. A catch of twenty made by Doc Stephens at Bluff Point the other night weighed sixty-five pounds. The same rig has been tried time and again in the day time, but with little success. Bluff Point, a bold promontory rising more than 800 feet above the lake, at the junction of the lake proper and its west branch, is the favorite locality for night bass fishing. The shores are rocky and the water deep.

If a person is rugged and tough, and likes a dash of the weird and uncanny mingled with his surroundings, he will enjoy black bass fishing at night on Lake Keuka. There is a chill in the wind that disturbs the lake's surface that goes straight to the marrow. The numbness of fingers that follows the handling of a wet line, and the adjusting anew of a bait is not calculated to give joy to the ordinary angler. The shadows of Bluff Point are dark, and the front of the bluff itself rises like a grim specter on the scene. The cry of the loon, wailing, demoniacal, blood curdling, sometimes bursting upon one almost at his side, and then coming from afar with the chasing waves, is among the attendant diversions, and one that does not add much to the cheerfulness of the surroundings, but add zest to the sport. That this novel way of bass fishing is popular on Lake Keuka, however, was well testified to the other night, when no less than fifty boats were drifting about in the shadows off Blue Point, each containing from one to three fishermen. The catch of big bass that night ran far up into the hundreds. Ordinary everyday black bass fishing, always excellent on Lake Keuka, was never better than it is this fall.—Hammondsport Cor. New York Sun.

The Rats Took the Morning Paper.

A family of rats here have amazingly disturbed the family in whose cellar they dwelt. For several days in succession the morning paper, which was left upon the front steps of the house early every morning, was missing. Complaint was made at the office of the paper, and it was found that the sheet had been properly delivered right along. Some days later a neighbor, who had arisen early in the morning, happening to look out of his window, saw two large rats upon the doorstep of the house opposite. He watched their movements for a while, and saw them take the morning paper and disappear with it under the piazza. He reported what he had seen, and an investigation showed that the rats had burrowed down from beneath the porch to the cellar, and, in a secluded spot, had built a nest and were rearing a promising batch of young. The nest was constructed out of Hartford morning newspapers.—Hartford Telegram.

Moving a Bridge.

The Norwich Bulletin says recently the Pennsylvania railroad wanted a big iron bridge, 238 feet long and weighing 25,000 tons, moved from its place over Mill Creek, near Lancaster, to a new site forty-five feet away. Master Carpenter Beard took the job. He had 100 men to help him. He made his preparations leisurely, and, when the last train had passed over the bridge, with his hundred men and his trestles, rollers, jacks and cranes he set to work. In just fifty-eight minutes from the time the work began the bridge was in its new place and a freight train of such size as to require two locomotives was passing over it. Now the ancients couldn't have done that in the same time if they had had 10,000 men. What we know about iron and its uses and how to work it is worth more to the world than all the lost arts of all past ages combined.

Very Funny, Indeed.

Two very humorous boys are in jail at Burlington, Ia. They had a tame crane and a funny idea. The idea was to catch another smaller boy and hold him while they made the crane peck at him. They did this, and the crane pecked out one of the small boy's eyes. The judge sent the boys to jail for fifteen and thirty days. When they get out the victim of their humor ought to organize a posse and capture them and tie them up and have a little fun with the crane himself. This would appeal strongly to their moral natures.—Chicago Mail.

and too often, moved by over much affection to give way, and the result is that he or she wins only a more or less conscious contempt. The truth is that even in friendship we are all human, and it is well to reflect that if one desires to hold the regard of his friend it is necessary to hold also his respect. It is sometimes wise to displease a friend for his own good and for the sake of holding his affection up to its level.—Boston Courier.

Army Doughnuts.

A Massachusetts officer details with evident enjoyment some foraging exploits of the northern army during Sherman's great march. One of these was of a sort which even the bitterest Confederate might have enjoyed.

One day a forager noticed an ornamental shrub growing in a yard of red clay, with marks of black loam on it. It struck him that it was not in its native soil, and he went for that bush.

It easily came out of the ground, and out of the hole under it, of which it was the tell tale, came a whole stock of provisions and family clothing.

Another of our men, while crossing a plowed field, was attracted by suspicious signs, and ran his ramrod into the ground. A foot down it struck something solid.

The kind hearted finder hastened to make others rich as well as himself. He ran down to the band with two tin cups running over, one with syrup, the other with peach butter, while the delicious sweets dripped from his clothing and his person, as if in confirmation of his pleasing tale.

"Plenty more right up there; forty-two hogsheads full!"

Sometimes a mistake was made. One of a band, passing a log house, levied on it for a calabash of lard, and the usual batch of doughnuts was fried that night. A peculiar flavor, supposed to be due to an excess of soda, was noticed; but hard marched men, with sharkish appetites, did not stop for trifles. Daylight revealed the fact that the doughnuts had been fried in soft soap.—Youths' Companion.

A Peculiar Tuft of Hair.

A French paper notes that the members of a noble family of Limousin, when about the age of 20, develop a round tuft of white hair over the forehead, albeit the rest of their hair may be black, brown or red. The portraits of their ancestors for many generations past show this distinguished mark, of which the descendants are not a little proud. We believe the Orsini family of Italy are also remarkable for the growth of a tuft of white hair, a characteristic of their ancestors during many centuries.—London Court Journal.

The Highest Development.

Make the marriage right and the offspring will tend to be right. Perhaps it may be true that we need a new ideal of the marriage relation. The old one in which the woman promises to obey the man is perishing visibly before our modern eyes. Often she ought not to do so, for the man may be a fool or a brute. And the theory adopted by many ill mated couples that marriage is a discipline is too cynical to be either true or attractive. The theory of easy divorce and frequent change as a remedy for ordinary disagreements has also serious disadvantages, and is no sound remedy. It is only a poor refuge from immediate suffering. But a new and perhaps useful attitude may be gained by looking upon matrimony, as it is, in truth, the only complete condition of humanity.

In no other relation can man or woman reach their highest development. No character is full till it comprises its opposite. The very divergencies at which each party frets are the seeking necessities of its own nature. Each would be partial and narrow without the other, and the new motto we may propose for matrimony is the new word, development. Marriage is development. If not quite happy, it is still generously educational. If love goes out from it, yet charity, wisdom, tact and liberality of mind may remain in it. Blind love may indeed remain and leave the happy lovers without its best effects, since even love may remain narrow and selfish. But the man who has learned to comprehend the feminine nature with its delicate, sprightly, graceful qualities as his own, and the woman who has adopted something of masculine independence, liberality and courage into her constitution, will be far better than the sole endowment nature would have given either to be alone.—Cor. Woman's Cycle.

How She Was Fooled.

I have never said anything disrespectful of a woman, and I am not going to break over the rule now; but I heard a story on a Chicago woman of high standing which I think is too good to keep. She had been to St. Paul with a party of both sexes. At the conclusion of their visit they boarded a sleeper, and, as they were somewhat weary, they retired early. In less than a half hour there was some sort of accident, the result of which was the train remained all night in almost the exact spot where the party boarded the sleeper. On the following morning the woman of whom I spoke at first met her companions, and, as is generally the case with passengers who are acquainted in a sleeper, the question, "How did you sleep?" was passed around. The heroine of my story said she had passed a miserable night. Well, one may pass a miserable night without being on a sleeper. But the woman was not contented with the statement, for she added: "I never could sleep in the cars. The noise and continuous rattle and bumping of the train make me nervous. And on this road, especially, which is so rough and full of curves, you know."

Well, they had the laugh on her when the situation was explained, and she begged the party to say nothing about it in Chicago, as her husband was such a tease. The party kept their word. They didn't say anything about it in Chicago, but one of them told it in St. Paul.—Interview in Chicago Tribune.

Mrs. Southworth's Start.

Mrs. E. D. E. N. Southworth, who has probably written more books than any other American author, living or dead, found her first publisher under singular circumstances. Some forty years ago Mrs. Southworth, then a young woman, was almost a daily visitor at the store of Joe Shillington, who for nearly half a century has been a bookseller in Washington. She never spoke to any one, and Shillington and his clerks came in time to regard her as a little queer. One day she timidly approached him and handing him a large bundle, told him that it was the manuscript of a story she had written and which she wished he would send to some of the papers of which he was the agent. The bookseller complied with her request and sent it to a Baltimore literary weekly, whose editor was so favorably impressed with the story that he brought it to the attention of Dr. Bailey of The National Era. Dr. Bailey requested Shillington to arrange an interview with the young author, but the latter did not know her name, and it was only after a long search that it was found that it was Southworth, and that she was teacher of a small private school in Georgetown. The story was finally printed as a serial by Dr. Bailey, and later republished by Peterson in book form, having an immense sale. Later Robert Bonner secured Mrs. Southworth's services for The Ledger, to which she has ever since remained a contributor. —Current Literature.

Not Guilty if They Can Leave Town.

A correspondent writes us as follows: Two tramps were tried in the Paducah City court last week on a charge of vagrancy. The case was submitted to a jury, and one of the tramps made a lengthy and feeling speech in behalf of himself and comrade, after which the jury retired, and in about two minutes returned and gravely delivered to the court the following verdict:

"We, the jury, find them not guilty, and the mayor to give each one a dollar apiece to help them out of town.—W. C. Lewis, Foreman."—Texas Siftings.

An Elixir of Life.

Dr. Isaac Bartlett, of Hope, Me., is one of those who have attained a good old age, and he is said to have lived all his life on bread and milk, and never to have eaten an ounce of meat in his life, never to have taken a teaspoonful of intoxicating liquors and never to have used tea, coffee or tobacco. He now weighs 240 pounds and is in the regular practice of his profession.—Detroit Free Press.

A BLOODY AFFRAY

Is often the result of "bad blood" in a family or community, but nowhere is bad blood more destructive of happiness and health than in the human system. When the life current is foul and sluggish with impurities, and is slowly distributing its poisons to every part of the body, the peril to health, and life even, is imminent. Early symptoms are dull and drowsy feelings, severe headaches, coated tongue, poor appetite, indigestion and general lassitude. Delay in treatment may entail the most serious consequences. Don't let disease get a strong hold on your constitution, but treat yourself by using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and be restored to the blessings of health. The "Discovery" is guaranteed to cure in all cases of diseases for which it is recommended, or money paid for it will be refunded.

MERIT WINS.

We desire to say to our citizens, that for years we have been selling Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Dr. King's New Life Pills, Bucklen's Arnica Salve and Electric Bitters, and have never handled remedies that sell as well, or that have given such universal satisfaction. We do not hesitate to guarantee them every time and we stand ready to refund the purchase price, if satisfactory results do not follow their use. These remedies have won their great popularity purely on their merits. H. C. Sharpe & Co., druggists. sept3d&w

DYSPEPSIA IS NOT A CATHARTIC. DYSPEPSIA

INDIGESTION and kindred diseases; also Sick Headache, Chronic Diarrhoea, Constipation, and deranged conditions of the blood, resulting from imperfect digestion.

AN ARTIFICIAL GASTRIC JUICE

NOT A SECRET REMEDY.

Send formula on every bottle. Endorsed by the best Physicians.

The endorsement of an able physician qualified to judge, is the best evidence of a medicine's merit.

Dr. L. H. Coe, Syracuse, says: I have tried Dyspepsia in cases of Dyspepsia with good results. I have prescribed it freely, and value it more and more highly. For cases in which such a compound is indicated, it has no equal. The pleasant taste commends it for use with children.
