DISCHARGING STATE EXCISE AGENTS

Since Saturday night State Commissioner of Excise Farley has discharged twenty-eight special agents of this Department. No charges of incompetence or misconduct were lodged against these men.

In this he has done exactly what was expected of him—what he was appointed to do for the State Excise Department is in Democratic hands for the first time since its creation, and this wholesale discharge of men is the result. Democrats around the state are hungry for jobs and the department offers vast chances for patronage and pap if it is to be used as political machine.

Special agents are in the competitive class, under the Civil Service laws. The action of Commissioner Farley in dismissing these men will be contested in the courts. Fourteen of the twenty-eight are war veterans—thirteen of the Civil War and one of the Spanish-American War. Two others are exempt firemen. They all maintain that thus they were protected from dismissal except on proof of charges formally filed against them, but intend to fight the case against the Democratic Excise Commissioner.

Commissioner Farley must appoint the successors to these men from a Civil Service competitive list. He is permitted to make probationary appointments for a period of three months, then to replace these probationers with others if they prove unsatisfactory. But possibly when the final points are settled he will find that the men he has so incontinually thrust out will be back in their jobs once more with salary allowance during their enforced absenteeism.

SAVING THE BIRDS.

The efforts of a Kansas congressman to have the migrations of birds legally recognized as a form of interstate commerce is but one token—though a striking one—of a disposition to accord the bird a more important place in the general economy. The western legislator would stop the slaughter so common during the migratory movements of spring and fall by the imposition of fines ranging from $100 to $1,000.

"The importance of the bird in the agricultural life of the country," says the Chicago Record-Herald, "has just been made plainer through an address delivered by one of the professors at the University of Chicago. He declared, in effect, that hunters from the cities, failing to realize the value of bird life in relation to farm products, made possible an annual loss to the crop and forests of the United States, through the unchecked depredations of insects, of $700,000,000. With the extermination of quail in Illinois the potato bug gains ground. With the destruction of the kingfisher goes the most efficient defender of the poultry yard.

"To put the birds under the protection of the interstate law may seem a quaint and novel idea, yet his idea ought to be as welcome in our local environment as in any other throughout the land. The South end of Lake Michigan is the point par excellence for the study of migratory bird life. In this community the bird, whether as the guardian of crops or simply as a friendly and companionable songster, should count on a kindly reception.

The bronze tablet erected on the campus of St. John's college at Annapolis to the memory of the French soldiers and sailors, who prevented the capture and burning of Annapolis in March, 1781, by the British forces, was unveiled yesterday afternoon in the presence of President Taft and Ambassador Jusserand. The President and French Ambassador made formal addresses after which the tablet was unveiled by Miss Amelie D. Fau Fowler, of Baltimore, a descendant of Admiral Count de Grasse, commander of the French fleet at the siege of Yorktown.

Asked by a stockholder for a statement regarding steel trade conditions, Judge Gary yesterday said: "We are satisfied with the amount of business and profits of the last fifteen months but could handle more orders. We are running at between 73 and 74 per cent. of capacity. At present we have about 55 per cent. and we do not desire more than 60 per cent. of the business at any time as we do not desire to have raised against us the charge of monopoly or to antagonize the laws of public sentiment on that question." Our business during the first three months of this year averaged 35,000 to 40,000 tons a day. The profit on our products, the last ten years, has been about the same per ton. Wages have been increased and prices have been decreased somewhat but our cost of production, owing to improvements and economies has decreased and therefore we have been able to realize the same profit per ton."

FIRE CHIEF CROKER RESIGNS.

Edward F. Croker, New York's famous fire chief for twelve years, has resigned to establish a private enterprise to be known as the Chief Croker Fire-preventing and Engineering Company.

Chief Croker's new company will be incorporated and will work as an auxiliary to the Fire Department for the prevention of fires. It is expected that the connection between the department and the new prevention company will soon become official, but the work of the new concern will be entirely in the line of fire prevention and will have nothing to do with fire fighting.

He will be pensioned handsomely. For his benefit the pay of the head of the uniformed force was made $10,000 a year, and as he has had twenty-seven years' service, the last twelve as chief, the commissioner was empowered to retire him at any pension he chose, so long as it was not less than half of the annual pay. By fixing the pension at $6,000 Commissioner Waldo makes Chief Croker receive about half of what he had as chief, there having been some perquisites for membership on various boards. With the next chief the pay will go back to $7,000 a year, which is $500 less than is received by the deputy chief in charge of Brooklyn and Queens, Thomas Lally, who is in a class by himself among the deputy chiefs.

John Kenlon, who will succeed Chief Croker, upon his retirement, as acting chief pending the choice of a successor, has been in the Fire Department since April 2, 1887. During that period he gained much fame as a fire fighter and has many rescues to his credit. Only last July he won a medal by personal heroism at a pier fire. He is fifty-one years old, Irish, and a fighter all the time.

The self proclaimed Democratic tariff annihilators couldn't show their sincerity more convincingly than by removing the duty on sugar. It would make an all-round hit, for everybody uses sugar.

The Democratic leaders of the House have not decided to place raw wool on the free list. That doesn't read like an all wool and a yard wide determination to storm the Republican tariff works wherever they can find them.

The revenue derived from raw wool amounts to about $20,000 a year. Just think of it in connection with the noise made over it in all the time since the Payne tariff bill was passed.

In the House yesterday, Representative Hall of Connecticut, a Republican and strong protectionist, defended reciprocity with Canada, declaring that its advocates are standing squarely in line with protection and are carrying out the pledge of the Republican platform.

Only thirty-six of the ninety-one Senators can be depended upon to vote against reciprocity with Canada. This situation affords the utmost satisfaction to the President, who regards the Canadian reciprocity agreement as the one all important piece of legislation before this session of Congress.

Flat denial of the charges of President Ralph Peters of the Long Island Railway that the Postoffice is holding up railways of the country for $20,000 annually, was made by Second Assistant Postmaster-General Stuart yesterday in a statement describing the charges as "not only groundless, but worn out."

"The Government is paying a fair price for the transportation of mails," said Stuart.

Commanding officers of the organizations of the National Guard and the Naval Militia were asked yesterday by Adjut. General Verbeck to submit a draft of their commissioned officers whom they would recommend for the proposed depot battalions of their organizations. It is intended to take steps which will result in the immediate formation of reserve or depot battalions or units for each organization of the National Guard which may at any time in the future be called into the services of the United State by the President.

Although "Uncle Joe" Cannon isn't a minority leader, and hasn't any claim to special favoritism at the hands of the new majority, the Democrats have considerately allowed him the rare favor of an office within only a few steps of the House floor. The ex-Speaker is lodged in the quarters formerly occupied by the Committee on Pensions. Minority Leader Mann, who could have had the place, gracefully withdrew in favor of Cannon, and took a room on the floor below.

Former Police Magistrate Henry J. Furlong was ordered released from Sing Sing yesterday on parole by the State parole board after serving more than a year for bribery. Furlong appeared before the parole board in behalf of his application and said that he had several offers to go into the real estate and insurance business in Brooklyn where he was at one time a power in politics and that he had practically agreed to accept one of these offers. The board ruled that he might go to his farm at Suffern, Rockland county, for a time to recuperate.

Miss Goldie St. Clair, the champion horsewoman of the country, met her death at last by a fall from a notoriously wicked animal, upon whose back she tempted fate once too often. Miss St. Clair last summer was the feature of the frontier celebration at Cheyenne at which Col Roosevelt, who was present remarked that a "bad horse would finally get her." There are plenty of good horses that may be mounted with perfect safety. Why not fatten up and kill the "bad" ones and dispose of the horse steaks, chops and roasts on the Paris or Berlin markets?

THE TIMES EVENING Chit-Chat.

BY RUTH CAMERON.

Some weeks ago I included among other suggestions of unusual occupations for women a letter received from a woman who had been very successful in raising hens.

This woman said that she had fifty-five hens, averaging four dozens eggs a day, that her feed and supplies averaged $3.80 a month, and that she sold the eggs at 40 cents a dozen the year around to a regular customer who called for them.

This letter called forth the following protest, presenting the other side of the picture, which I think fairness bids me publish:

"My Dear Miss Cameron:—Your talk on hens and eggs in yesterday's paper is perfectly absurd, wherever you got it from. The poultry business is an all-year-round business and there probably are not fifty-five hens in the country who will average 48 eggs per day. If one had a flock that would do that the eggs would sell at a great big price for setting purposes. Go to a practical poultry man and see if his books will show much over an average of 150 eggs per hen a year.

"Then the feed expense is way off. It figures up at 33 cents per year a hen. No one can feed for that. Furthermore, you allow nothing for houses, nothing for labor or casual losses—and where, oh, where can you find a market that will pay 40 cents a dozen the year around? Please tell me, for I grow eggs for a living and really would like such a market myself.

"I am afraid your article will influence someone ignorant of the business to start to get rich on a few hens, with dark failure for a result. For the right kind of woman poultry keeping is a congenial and fairly profitable business. Take one season with another, with business ability and economy all along the line one should clear from a dollar to a dollar and a quarter per year on a hen. Of course experts growing fancy stock can do more, but the average woman seeking a livelihood is not a poultry expert, and would have to depend on selling a good quantity of eggs for family use. Such a woman could manage probably five hundred hens and raise some chickens to sell."

* * *

Another idea for the woman who wants some unusual method of earning money is thus suggested by a reader:

"A woman who lives near a schoolhouse would no doubt find a number of teachers who crave a hot lunch at noon, but have no time to seek it. If a hot, home-made tray lunch were brought to these teachers' own class rooms at a reasonable figure, say 25 cents, they would doubtless be glad to patronize the person who could supply them."

* * *

A woman whom I know has worked up quite a successful business as a renovator.

That term covers a good many kinds of work. It includes putting in fresh yokes to dresses, remodeling sleeves and cuffs and minor details into style, doing fine mending, taking spots out of delicate fabrics, curling feathers, cleaning white gloves and many similar operations too numerous to mention.

This woman also makes fitted underwear for people who like home-made underclothing, and a few plain shirtwaists, but the most of her time is taken up with the renovating.

She happens to know a good many working girls who are too busy or incapable of doing their own odd jobs and she finds them both good customers and good advertisers.

In the case of the feathers and the gloves she charges prices slightly under professional rates and having a knack about such things, removes and replaces the feathers.

Altogether, by putting herself into whatever niche needs filling she has made a fairly comfortable living. The trade, of course, has developed very gradually, but she thinks that any woman suitably located and with a knack at such things might develop a similar business if she did not have to depend upon her earnings at first.

Don't forget to send in that suggestion of some unusual occupation for women. We want it. Don't say "Some day," but take your pen in hand and "Do it now."

JOB'S PATIENCE

My friend the preacher tells a tale about a man who lived in Uz. The ills he knew would make you pale; misfortunes used to round him buzz," so says my friend the preacher man, who shudders as he goes ahead; he had big boils upon his can, and all his cows and hogs were dead. The way he suffered was a sin, and oft he wished he was on ice, and bores came up to rub it in by handing him some good advice. You snort around and kick and wail when little things seem out of plumb, yet this man's patience didn't fail when all the world was on the bum. He sat around his ruined home, and put fresh flaxseed on his boils, or scraped them with a currycomb, or painted them with healing oils; he lay upon his humble couch and watched misfortunes come like rain; and yet he never was a grouch; he didn't cuss things or complain. "O man," my friend the preacher cries, "it makes me tired to hear you whine! It does, dot rot my blooming eyes, when all the world is gay and fine! "That chap in Uz," I humbly say, "you think the most ill used of men, and yet he was a lucky jay—he never used a fountain pen."
