THOSE WHO SEEK THE BASS

Hard Work and Discomforts Merely Matters of Course to the Sport-Loving Fisherman.

If bass-fishing were in the category of hard labor, the bass should worry. Heartaches, boneaches, sunburn and mosquito bites fall to the lot of the bass fisher. Three days in advance of the date set for your martyrdom you begin to arrange for it. You first secure bait. Five miles from home there is a creek where minnows and topies are to be found. You must have traps and dobsen, crickets and grasshoppers, for when bass are dieting they are particular about their bill of fare. Baits may be had for 50 cents. They are not, of course, such baits as one would find at the Thousand Islands or at Central park, New York. They are just baits, having two sides and a bottom, and thus managing to float. A tomato can is one of the chief requisites in bass fishing. It is necessary for balling. Oars are a secondary consideration. Anything with a flat face (a fence board preferred) will answer the purpose, because when fishing for bass one sits and waits or smokes and swears. If a man were obliged to occupy a church pew without a back to rest his spine against, what a howl of protest he would make! Yet he will sit in a leaky boat seven days a week and never grumble, and in spite of everything will sleep every night like a trooper.—Zim, in Cartoons Magazine.

HUNTER HAS TURNED SOLDIER

Capt. Selous, Famed on Two Continents, Fighting With the Allied Troops in East Africa.

Capt. F. C. Selous, famous throughout the world as a big game hunter, is hunting the biggest game that has fallen to his lot. For he has joined the allies, and somewhere in East Africa is accrediting him so well that only recently he was mentioned in dispatches for "gallant and distinguished conduct." Selous, among the natives of Africa, is noted as a scout and hunter. Although he has passed his sixty-fourth birthday, age did not deter him from joining the Legion of Frontiersmen in February, 1915, and, a month later, he was gazetted a temporary second lieutenant of the Twenty-fifth battalion Royal Fusiliers. Since then, he has been promoted to a captaincy. Since he was a youth of nineteen, Selous has spent his life hunting big game in the wilds of Africa. When he left Rugby, he packed his equipment and sought Matabeleland, where he started his career. Years ago, he brought down his hundredth elephant. Seventy-eight of them were slaughtered with an old smooth-bore, muzzle-loading duck gun. He holds a record of three full-grown lions in four shots, and his aggregate bag of big game runs into the thousands. Besides scouring Africa, he made a 1,500-mile tour of Alaska hunting moose and caribou. Selous is usually accredited with having been the inspiration for Sir Rider Haggard's "Allan Quatermain," "Allan Quatermain's Wife," and "King Solomon's Mines."

CLEOPATRA NOT A BEAUTY

Far From It, According to Proof Hand-Ed Down by Numismatists of Her Day.

Cleopatra, long famed as the fairest of the fair, was not beautiful at all; in fact, she wasn't even what is commonly called pretty, says a local report of the meeting of the convention of numismatists in the Baltimore American. Cleopatra really was ugly. This more or less startling fact, so long unknown to the world in general, has come out from its hiding to disillusion a deluded public as a result of the annual convention of the American Numismatic association, says an exchange. Numismatists can prove that the supposed bewitching Egyptian queen had irregular features, a flat chest, large ears, small eyes and rather bony shoulders. And, too, her neck was a more or less scrawny affair, with none too faint suggestion of an Adam's apple. The proof is found in some of the rare coins which the numismatists attending the convention from all sections of the country brought with them. Cleopatra's portrait appears on some of these coins, and there are historical data to prove that she approved of these designs. As she was a very vain woman, they argue, she certainly would not have approved if the portraits had not been good likenesses.

EXCELLENT TRAIT IS CAUTION

Better to Be Sure Before You Move Than to Have Occasion for Vain Regrets.

Caution is the parent of safety. It is better to use caution in time than to regret too late. It is better to give the mind some exercise in consideration before beginning a new thing, remarks the Milwaukee Journal. It is wise to make friends slowly. Some people like to boast of being "so impulsive," and think that this should be an acceptable excuse for many failings. Impulse is often a good thing, but it needs a long course of careful training before it can be safely indulged. First impressions are often deceiving. One may not at first be attractive in appearance, but on further acquaintance, prove to be admirable in character. Those who are impulsive in making professions of friendship are not entirely to be depended on to be permanent or reliable. In giving way to a strong liking or aversion one often does injustice. Acquaintance is quite as likely to show admirable as unlikable qualities. Often at a certain hour has been changed to a deep and true friendship. And, on the other hand, some who appear admirable at first meeting, prove otherwise. Do not judge hastily on the impulse of a moment. Acts done on the impulse of the moment may cause repentance for many a year.

Movement of Population

Emigration from the eastern states to the middle West began in a small way soon after the close of the Revolutionary war, but was not large till after the admission of Ohio as a state in 1803. In 1800 the government adopted the system of selling public land in Ohio on credit and thus started a current of emigration to Ohio which soon made it a state and overflowed into Indiana. Old letters written from towns in Massachusetts, New York and Pennsylvania describe the roads leading west as thronged with large covered wagons filled with people and household goods, moving to "the Ohio." An Englishman who came West in 1810 wrote: "In passing through the upper parts of Virginia I observed a great number of farms that had been abandoned, on many of which good houses had been erected, and apple and peach orchards had been planted. On inquiring the reason, I was always informed that the owners had gone to the western country. From the New England states the emigrations are still more numerous. They mostly cross the Hudson river between Albany and Newburg, and must pass through Cayuga on their way to Pittsburgh. I was informed by an inhabitant of Cayuga in April, 1810, that more than 15,000 wagons had passed over the bridge at that place within the last 18 months, containing emigrants to the western country."

Short, and to the Point

A book entitled "Coke of Norfolk and His Friends" gives a picture of an earlier period of English rural life when there was more of a feeling of equality between land owners and their laborers than exists today, and describes a dinner given at the end of the sheep-shearing season. The shortest speech on record at the clipping is the following. It came from a farmer who had been observed making efforts to rise to his feet, but had been pulled back by his companions. Suddenly Coke noticed what was going on and interferred. "I see," he said, "that good fellow has something to say to us. Pray let him speak." The man, thus encouraged, rose triumphantly to his feet and hammered on the table. Profound silence at once reigned through the room, and he delivered himself as follows: "Master Coke and gentlemen, what I wish to say is—if more landlords would do as Master Coke he does, there'd be less doo as they doo!" And amid thunders of applause he repeated himself.

Modern Fiction

"Will you?" he murmured, gazing into her eyes appealingly. But she was undecided and turned away. "Say 'yes!'" he exclaimed, hoarsely. "Don't let me go without some encouragement!" He bent down and showed her the rich presents he had to offer; dull, animal appeal poured from his very soul into hers. She drew a deep breath. "I will," she whispered, unsteadily. "Wait."

The Source of "You All"

In a recent Sunday edition there were citations from the Old and New Testaments and from Shakespeare, wherein the expression "you all" and similar expressions were used, quoted in justification thereof. Allow me to add a classical authority, no less than Cicero, who repeatedly used the expression "vos omnes"—"you all." Just as this is the Augustan age of Latin literature, its high water mark in literature, so "you all" is English of the purest type. I once was ashamed of the speech of our southern mountaineers, thinking that it arose from ignorance and lack of cultivation, but I have since realized that they were speaking a purer type of English than were our college men, believing, as I now do, that the nearer the source the purer the issue therefrom.—Letter to the New York Times.

FARM LEGISLATION

Apple Packing Law Approved Peach Packing, Farret Keeping, Hunting Restrictions Suggested

That the apple packing law, providing that grades of apples be marked on the barrel or box, be left exactly as it stands now was one of the recommendations unanimously adopted at the conference in Albany at which amendments to the agricultural law were discussed. The conference was called by Commissioner of Agriculture Charles E. Wilson so that these interested parties could give their views on the proposed changes in agricultural laws. In addition the conference decided unanimously in favor of a National mandatory apple packing law, uniform in all States.

It was the opinion of those present that the apple packing law would work out to the benefit of the producer and that it would eventually increase the demand for New York State apples.

At the conference it was recommended that a bill be prepared for introduction at the coming session of the Legislature to cover the packing of ponches.

Another recommendation was that the Legislature appropriate $5,500 to provide for an investigation of bear diseases. A law providing for the protection of farm lands from deer was advocated. A measure giving the owner of land the right to use ferrets or other means or ridding his premises of rabbits was advocated.

The conference adopted a resolution recommending that a law be enacted making it a misdemeanor for a person to hunt on another person's property without obtaining the consent of the owner. It was suggested by some of those at the conference that hunters caused much annoyance at times and that damage to property often resulted.

The agricultural interests of the State were well represented at the conference, and there was wide discussion of many agricultural questions.

Alkali Makes Soap Bad For Washing Hair

Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali, which is very injurious, as it dries the scalp and makes the hair brittle. The best thing to use is just plain melted coconut oil for this is pure and entirely greaseless. It is very cheap and beats the most expensive soaps or anything else all to pieces. You can get this at any drug store, and a few ounces will last the whole family for months. Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in, about a teaspoonful is all that is required. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, cleanses thoroughly, and rinses out easily. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and is soft, fresh looking, bright, fluffy, wavy, and easy to handle. Besides, it loosens and takes out every particle of dust, dirt and dandruff.
