GOING FISHING? TAKE A BOAT

The best single way to put fishing odds in your favor is to use a boat. Numerous national surveys are on record that show that fishermen using boats catch more fish than those who do not.

A boat is not a key to instant success, however. Whether you are fishing Lake Ontario, an Adirondack lake, or a farm pond in the Southern Tier, you've got to know how to use your boat. Here are some tips I've found useful in using a boat to catch more fish.

Keep your tackle ready. I usually have three rods and reels set up and within arm's reach. One is usually an ultra-light rig with a spinner or other light lure attached. My second rod is used for casting standard size lures or trolling, and the third will be rigged to fish live bait. This way I lose less time changing lures, and can try two or three methods at each spot while my companion usually tries one.

Keep seated. This is a rule number one for boating safety in small boats, but a study in Wisconsin indicates that musky fishermen catch more fish sitting than standing. Presumably, seated anglers are not so readily spotted by sharp-eyed fish over as great a distance. Anyway, I keep my profile as low as possible.

Move quietly, is still another cardinal rule. Everyone should know that banging the bottom or side of a boat, or rattling a tackle box, is a warning telegraphed to fish all around the boat.

The big fish right now among many fishing experts is to fish "structures." This is just a fancy name for fishing the reefs, shoals, weed beds, flooded stream channels, sinking trees and the like. These are the very same places anglers have been fishing since the hook was invented and the way to work them is with a boat. You have got to get out where the fish are living.

It should go without saying, but here's a tip: trolling is one of the best ways to find fish. Simply trail this lacy man's fishing, but trolling is an excellent way to cover a lot of water. It will produce fish, and when you are found some you might want to anchor and cast to the school. But trolling with an outboard motor has filled up the stringer for me on hundreds of jaunts.

One final idea, keep fishing. The fisherman who keeps his lure in the water is reaching more fish. And, the more you reach the better your odds of catching some.

Summed up, this review course for boat fishermen is as follows: be ready, be quiet, stay hidden, fish those good spots the experts hit, troll to find fish, and keep fishing.

There's a difference in Blocks.

The difference is NORTHERN.
Who says a concrete block is a concrete block? There are some important differences in blocks. Because more material goes into the mold, Northern blocks are stronger and tend to resist water better. For homeowners and commercial builders, this can mean less money spent on tarring and resurfacing of foundations and in sealing walls. Northern produces regular weight cored blocks in all sizes. In addition, we supply a complete line of auxiliary building materials and masonry supplies. When you need blocks, call Northern. There is a difference!
