THIS IS FULTON

I sat at Perkins next to a very good looking young lady and I asked her what her name was. She said it was Maura Ingamells. I asked her how old she was and she said she was four years old.

"Where did you get those beautiful brown eyes?" I asked.

"I don't know but I'm going to keep them," Maura said.

I once mentioned to a friend that I had an abhorrance of Little Leagues and we didn't talk to each other for two days. I like children but I can't stand the doting commercialism that evolves around a bunch of youthful grasshoppers who'd like to play baseball but keep getting in the way of old men who want to play, too.

And I have the same feeling about the troubles we cause some of the teenagers or adolescents—as we were called decades ago.

Adolescents now find themselves the constant objects of attention by the rest of the populace. The kids are puzzled by this and in some cases react violently. After all, what they wear, what they sing, what they eat, what they say and how they say it is constantly under the closest scrutiny day in and day out by their elders who constantly publicize every detail. I'd say the youngsters have every reason to resent this.

I remember once that these years were simply looked at as the awkward period of growing up and we were mercifully ignored. Today they're mercilessly exploited and you can't blame them sometime for being rebellious about it.

And when it comes to help, we help them very little with the low tone of our public morality.

We hesitate to condemn the garbage that's permeating some of our television and the [illegible] that lines up the shelves of newsstands—here and elsewhere—and our parental delinquency is as bad as some of our children.

Over implification is so easy and I'm afraid I've gotten myself into it.

But let's say this. Parents can just do so much. And this they should do. They can love wisely and provide adequately for their children; they can instruct in the things of God; they can educate properly and should give good example.

If they do this, they should have no regrets. After all, it's up to the children themselves.

Shopping Center May Start May 1 Small Industry Interested In Fulton

A 30-store shopping center is slated to be located in Fulton with ground to be broken either on the East side or West side site by May 1, it was announced this week.

Anthony Rose of the Northern New Jersey Realty Corp., Red Bank, N. J., said the builder and owner of the shopping center would be Frank Cedrone of Fulton.

Under consideration for the location, Mr. Rose said, is a site north of the downtown business section and the former location of the Victoria Paper Mills Co. and the Hunter Arms Co. He said another location, which he failed to pinpoint, is on the east-west arterial, near the western city line.

Options on the Victoria Paper Mill property, now owned by the Osborne Paper Mill Equipment Corp., and the former Hunter Arms land, now controlled by the North Second Street Development Corp., were obtained several weeks ago, but expired late last month. The Loblaw super market chain was reported interested in locating in a shopping center here and are still believed ready to set up a store here when an area is developed.

Mr. Rose said that which of the two sites would be finally selected for the development would depend largely upon parking facilities available and easily accessability for the public. However, he said Mr. Cedrone would have the final say as to the site.

Mr. Rose further stated this week he was representing a small industry in New Jersey that had evidenced interest in locating in the Fulton area and that he planned talks within the next few days with Mayor Elon K. Rowlee and Chamber of Commerce representatives as to possible location sites for the company.

Two Weeks Tell Story on Housing

The next two weeks will decide the fate of the proposed 60 unit low cost rental addition to the present Pathfinder Courts in the fourth ward.

New York Housing Authority Commissioner James W. Gaynor has in his office this week a resolution passed by the Fulton Housing Authority asking for an application for 60 unit multiple dwelling apartment type of housing.

The resolution was unanimously passed by the six-man local housing group last week.

The application will be acted upon favorably, The Patriot has learned and within a few days the local housing authority will have back in its hands a loan and subsidy contract; which actually is a three-way agreement between the state, the city and the Fulton Housing Authority. It is to be presented to the common council for approval in the next two weeks.

As soon as the three-way agreement is signed, it is reported that it will take about 18 months before the 60 families will start moving into the Pathfinder annex. The new proposed unit is expected to [illegible] 20 of its 60 units to elderly couples.

New Suburban Housing, Business District Development, in New Stage

Meeting Monday for the regular March meeting the municipal planning commission considered items ranging from a proposed suburban development housing plan to improvements in the business district and elimination of a [illegible] from traffic for children attending Fairgrieve junior high school.

Russell D. Bailey, consultant to the commission, said he was now engaged in a study and survey of the business area in preparation for the future master plan for the city. He said the survey principally was concerned at present with parking facilities and problems, both on and off street, and future improvements for the business sections of the community.

In an effort to cover all phases of the study, Mr. Bailey [illegible] will [illegible] at 10 a.m. April 11 with members of the Chamber of Commerce Retail Merchants [illegible] and the municipal parking authority.

An outline of a proposed housing subdivision development was submitted to the commission by Joseph Bergman of Oneida St. The proposed development would provide 23 building lots in a section near the east city line and north of Oneida St. It would entail construction of [illegible] water and sewer services. The proposal was referred to Mr. Bailey for study and recommendations which will be received at a special meeting of the commission.

Mayor Elon K. Rowlee, who with City Attorney James C. Fannin, attended the Monday meeting, asked the commission to consider steps that could be taken to alleviate present traffic hazards to pupils enroute to and from classes at Fairgrieve junior high school. The mayor pointed out a large number of the children presently walk in the narrow Emery Street roadway due to a lack of sidewalks. He proposed as one remedy rerouting of the children over sidewalks in E. Broadway to the east-west arterial and then to Eighth St. to the school property. He said a great many of the children involved are occupants of the Pathfinder Courts housing project and that more children would be involved with the construction of a proposed 60 unit addition at the project.

The commission members expressed the opinion that Board of Education members should be vitally concerned with safety for the pupils at the school and recommended that Mr. Bailey confer with board members at 2 p.m. on April 11.

Using Your Money and Head

City Makes A Quick $5000

In a special meeting last week aldermen authorized City Chamberlain Maurice Shapiro to invest $500,000 in collected city tax moneys in U. S. Treasury bonds reaching maturity June 30.

The aldermen acted after Mr. Shapiro informed them the city had collected about $550,000 of the $1,200,000 tax money anticipated in 1960, and that the $500,000 would not be required for city use until July. The city, it was said, will realize about $5,000 from the short term investment.

In another resolution, the council set April 4 as the date to receive bids on the collection of garbage in the city.

Polish Home Turns Eye to Bowling Alleys

On the heels of the fire which destroyed Fulton Bowling Alleys over the weekend, The Patriot learned this week that the Polish Home might be a likely tenant in the city for a 12-alley structure.

A number of directors of the Polish Home, which just burned its mortgage two months ago after erecting a clubroom and auditorium on West First Street 10 years ago, have been having informal conversations on the project. The matter is expected to be brought up for membership discussion at the next monthly meeting.

Adolf Kalafarski, president of the Polish Home, which has a deep tradition of leadership in various athletic endeavors for several decades, said that when plans for the present Polish Home were drawn ten years ago deep consideration was given to bowling alleys.

"If bowling alleys were built they would probably be erected on the parking area adjacent to our clubrooms. This is a matter for the whole membership and I hesitate to make a comment now," Kalafarski said.

Tony Fedora, owner of the fire-destroyed alleys said he was undecided this week as to the future plans for the site but said he might rebuild and install 24 alleys.

Four fire companies battled the fire more than five hours Sunday morning and prevented its spread to the nearby Salsbury Bros. garage and sales agency on the north, and other buildings.

Patrolmen Joseph Varrecchia and Lloyd Crandall discovered the fire and radioed police headquarters with Fulton police being alerted. Two Fulton engines were dispatched tot he scene and Volney department in whose fire district the building was located, notified. Phoenix and Granby firemen later joined in the attack on the flames.

Fedora said his loss would range near $2000,000 and was partially covered by insurance. The remaining $100,000 loss was to automatic pinsetters, leased by the alleys, and bowling equipment of individual bowlers kept in the structure.

FISH SUPPER

The City Firemen are holding a fish supper family style at the firehouse on Jacksonville Rd. at 5:30 p.m. Friday.

Firemen under the county's mutual aid system battle the spectacular bowling alley fire. Fulton firemen were first on the scene and then turned over the job to the Volney Department in whose jurisdiction the property is located. The Salvation Army served coffee to the men from 6:30 until mid-morning.
