Wraith of Apache Who Defied Army Still Annoys U. S.

Tribe of Old Geronimo Is Stirring Up Trouble For Government.

ANADARKO, OKLA.—It has been 30 years since old Geronimo died, but the wraith of the rash Apache chief, who defied the might of the U. S. army, haunts the government yet.
 Aged members of his untamed band of Chiricahaus and their descendants have employed an attorney skilled in Indian affairs to carry to the tribal court of claims at Washington their contention that the white man's government did them wrong a half century ago.
 Eighty-seven Apaches pow-wowing at the town of Apache near here decided to ask redress for the more than 26 years they languished in captivity and compensation for tribal lands they claim were taken from them on New Mexico's Warm Springs reservation in 1882.

Once Defied Government.
 Grady Lewis, an Oklahoma City attorney who handled many tribal matters, has been dispatched to Washington to take up the claims.
 Once these hardy braves whooped defiance at the government, but they are old men now, too old to seize what they believe is theirs. So they turn to the white man's courts.

Many a wrinkled Chiricahau at the Apache pow-wow rode with Geronimo when he eluded United States troops early in 1886 and vanished into Mexico.
 Half-starved, bedraggled, they had been part of a weary band of tatterdemalions that surrendered at last in the late summer of 1886.

They had followed Geronimo into captivity, served at hard labor at Fort Pickens, Fla., or Saint Augustine, and had been returned to Fort Sill, Okla., in 1894.

Accepted Government Offer.
 Geronimo died in 1909, but it was not until 1913 that the government released his band.

Eighty-five followers of Geronimo accepted the government's offer to land around Apache. The rest returned to settle near Mesalero, N. M.

A reason for the current Apache attitude may be that Geronimo went to his grave convinced he had been the victim of a colossal double-cross at the hands of the army.
 Geronimo came from a line of Apache chiefs, rulers of what his people called the Be-don-ko-he tribe, one of six among the Apaches.

At 17 he was admitted into the council of warriors, a brawny, cunning, fearless youth. His first exploit that brought him to the notice of the army was to foray into Sonora, Mexico, in 1882.
 In 1884, after numerous other raids across the border, he launched a reign of terror in New Mexico and Arizona before he was finally captured.

This Little Alfie Was Too Tough Even for Army
 HAMILTON, ONT.—Alfred Crapp, who is only 18, is apparently even too tough for the Canadian army.
 Crapp was convicted of stealing a bicycle, but Magistrate Burbidge granted deferred sentence, when army officers testified that accused had enlisted, and that they could use him in the army.

A few days ago, city police received a call to go to the armories. There, somewhat chastened officers led them to Private Alfred Crapp, who was pacing a cell, surrounded by guards. Alfie, it appears, had been a very bad actor, and the officers wanted to get rid of him. They stated that they would dishonorably discharge him from the army. The police officers looked co-operative, pursed their lips, clicked their tongues, then pounced on Alfred, and bundled him into a Black Maria.
 Magistrate Burbidge gave Alfred six months in the Ontario reformatory.

Gondolas 'Come-Back'
 The gondola, historic craft of Venice, is coming back again to the lagoons and canals from which it had been driven by the more easily operated motor boat. Restricted use of gasoline driven vehicles is the reason. When the Doges ruled the Adriatic, Venice boasted thousands upon thousands of luxurious gondolas. Today there are little more than 500. And no longer is the hand propelled gondola knocked about by the wash of steamers or river boats.

Forger Is Too Polite, Adds 'Mr.' to Check

HAMILTON, MONT.—A ranch hand was arrested here because he was too polite.
 He wrote a check payable to himself and signed it "Mr. Harold Hagen," his employer.
 The "mister" part of the signature aroused the suspicion of a bank teller.

Still Seek Slayer Of New York Girl

Year-Old Murder Remains Mystery to Police.

LARCHMONT, N. Y.—The police of this suburban community are still engaged in an intensive search for the slayer of 17-year-old Mary Imelda Coyle, who was bludgeoned to death a year ago while on her way to devotional services.

The slaying was the second in Larchmont since its founding in 1886 and the police are determined to press it to solution regardless of how long it takes. The first Larchmont murder, which occurred in a grudge fight in 1916, was solved after eight months.

One point is settled in the minds of the police—the murderer who drove a metal wedge two inches into the girl's skull was familiar with the Larchmont-New Rochelle area. He trapped the girl in a pebbly road that would not likely have been found by a stranger.

Despite the brutality of the slaying, the perpetrator arranged the body with extreme care. He placed it in a spot where passers-by would be sure to see it the next morning. Her clothes were carefully smoothed out.

Thus far more than 400 persons have been questioned. Nine men wanted for offenses elsewhere have been turned up in the investigation. The quizzing of one 28-year-old suspect went back to his life in a founding home at the age of a year and a half. Thousands of automobiles have been checked for bloodstains. Fifty cars with such stains were found but all with authenticated explanations of cut fingers, sick persons, accidents.

Some 200 known sexual delinquents have been questioned. The girl's mother, Mrs. Mary Coyle, still goes to police headquarters two and three times a week to plead with the police to catch the murderer. Her estranged husband, who returned to the family after the slaying, again has departed. Mrs. Coyle lives on a houseboat.

RIO, WIS.—If you're looking for unusual pets, David Jennings suggests snakes. Fifty cars with such stains were found but all with authenticated explanations of cut fingers, sick persons, accidents.

Woman's Term Put Off Until Jail Is Finished

CEDAR CITY, UTAH.—Construction of a new city-county public safety building doesn't start until next week but its jail already has a prospective tenant.
 Justice Alex Rollo sentenced a woman to 30 days for drunkenness. Sheriff Haldow Christensen complained that there were no women's quarters in existing jails so Justice Rollo granted a five-month stay of execution—until the new structure is built.

Cat Hikes 10 Miles

SPOKANE, WASH.—The Persian cat of Arthur L. Jordan, police identification officer, disappeared from the Jordans' ranch near Medical lake, 10 miles from Spokane. Two weeks later it appeared on the back porch of the Jordans' home here.

Swiss War Measures
 Swiss military authorities have asked the governments of a number of cantons in the fortified or frontier zones of Switzerland to refuse to issue or renew licenses to foreigners for running restaurants, inns or hotels. Swiss counter-espionage agents have found that many restaurants, inns and hotels operated by foreigners in Switzerland have become espionage centers.
