But if they want eastern made work they can have it. Of course it is not equal to our own, but as fashions change often, it allows of getting new sty es with the greatest facility.

GRANDMA.

Grandma—gone to the land of eternal youth. How long she waited! After her work was gone, her threescore years and ten of labor and sorrow, how long still she waited, patient and quiet, till the day when she [illegible] go!

She "couldn't see why she [illegible] stay," she would say; "she didn't seem to be of any use to any one;" but [illegible] a great while longer now [illegible] and not grow impatient. We saw why she stayed, and blessed Providence that he left among us so long this living witness of his [illegible] love and faithfulness. How many times have our impatient and sinking hearts taken courage as we [illegible] of the dear old woman [illegible] the [illegible] of the life that was [illegible] of the new life soon to open for her [illegible] in the glowing dawn of it, and caught its spirit. When we thought we might give up, we could not [illegible] longer, therefore was always [illegible] us of the faithfulness of him that hath called us. For we knew very well she had borne weights as weary as ours, had suffered the heat and burden of the day as few are called to suffer, and had endured to the end, as seeing him who is invisible.

But her sheaves were gathered now. She had seen all her children and grandchildren who had come to maturity, a large family, possessing the promise of this life and of the life to come. One she had nursed and tended, her favorite grand child, was away on the ocean when grandma left us. Perhaps some whispering wind or roaming dream-spirit will tell her of it;—such things sometimes happen on the sea.

We have often prayed, "spare us from growing old!" when thrown with some testy, infirm, godless, and miserable old person; but our lovely grandmother was the type of Christian old age;—serene, cheerful, uncomplaining, afraid of nothing so much as of being troublesome. Age had brought neither querulousness nor great infirmity; she could hear the softest baby tones, and was still companionable and helpful at eighty-four.

We knew she must go very soon, but when she journeyed so far to see us all a little while ago, we did not suspect we had a guest who was only a fortnight's journey from heaven—heaven that is so far off to us, seen beyond the weary years to come! When she left us it was to go home indeed.

How happy and busy her spirit must be now, holding sweet intercourse with those who left her long ago! There she has found the dear companion of her life, one she loved and mourned sincerely. And there the infant children who years back went to heaven, and whom you may be sure she expected and longed for as she sat day by day with our little ones on her knee—those her tried heart gave up in the flower and promise of their life, and one she gladly laid to rest after his weary day of suffering and trouble. What a joyful meeting! Do you suppose the long past of her life here is but a moment in her memory now? Without doubt its sorrows have no weight; that cannot move a sigh now which drew strong crying and tears before—but its memories are not forgotten, but rather magnified in the clear seeing of heaven.

Every dark experience that waited for the future to reveal itself, every day of thronging hopes and doubts, of longings and regrets, will be understood, explained, illumined, glorified. Not a dim, distant point of time is life to her now, but a wonderful scene, whose mysterious workings, and multiplied events and discipline, are each arguments of praise and thankfulness. The traveller, torn and half perished, basking at length in the glowing light of the welcome fireside, whose distant beam he has been so long trying to reach, does not forget one moment of the dark and stormy way; but the memory has no longer any pain in it, and the refreshment and comfort of the fireside shine brighter at each recollection of peril and distress.

We are glad you are home grandma. Ask our Savior to increase our faith and courage to walk the way, the "long way between the now and then." We will try and sing, as in trembling tones you used to sing:

"The thing my God appoints is best;
While here to do his will be mine,
And his to fix my time of rest."

A gentleman residing in a village, finding that the diminution of his wood-piles continued after his fires were out, lay awake one night in order to obtain, if possible, some clue to the mystery.—At an hour when all honest folks should be in bed, hearing an operator at work in the yard he cautiously raised his chamber window, and saw a lazy neighbor endeavoring to get a large log on his wheelbarrow.

"You're a pretty fellow," said the owner, "to come and steal my wood while I sleep."

"Yes," replied the thief, "and I suppose you would stay up there and see me break my neck with lifting before you'd offer to come and help me."

During the past month, the oldest person of the [illegible], a woman named Hannah [illegible] at the supposed age of over one hundred and twenty years! From the family tradition, it is believed that she was born as early as 1741, and perhaps at a still earlier date.
