spatially where those who are working in the coal mines are subjected to the rigors of the industry. From high to low, all sections of the coal mining industry, from the pit boss to the miner, are subjected to the same kind of toil and strain. Yet, it is the miner who is the real victim, for he is the one who is subjected to the worst of the working conditions.

The miner is a hard worker, and he works long hours. He is subjected to the elements, and he is exposed to danger. He is subjected to the fumes of the mine, and he is subjected to the noise of the machinery. He is subjected to the dirt and the dust, and he is exposed to the risk of accidents. He is subjected to the constant threat of death, and he is subjected to the constant threat of disease.
