309 South 4th Street.

WASHINGTON HEIGHTS, Jan. 13.—A celebration was held at the new subway station at 309 South 4th Street in Washington Heights, New York, yesterday afternoon.

The celebration was attended by a large number of residents of the neighborhood, who were eager to see the new subway line put into operation. The station, which was built to provide efficient transportation for the growing population of the area, was officially opened by the Mayor of New York, who gave a speech in praise of the new facility.

The new station will provide a much-needed link between Washington Heights and the rest of the city, and is expected to greatly improve the quality of life for residents of the area. The station will be staffed 24 hours a day, 7 days a week, and will provide frequent service to all parts of the city.

The celebration was well-attended, with many residents taking the opportunity to ride the new subway line for the first time. Many praised the efficiency and comfort of the new system, and expressed hope that it would help to reduce traffic congestion in the area.

The new station is part of a larger initiative to improve public transportation in New York City, and is expected to play an important role in the continued development of the city.
