Changes Plea To Innocent

A brief man who pleaded guilty to possession of marijuana and to a whisky distillery at a federal court in Philadelphia was sentenced to nine months in prison today.

According to the court record, the man, identified as James B. Miller, 29, of 316 West 11th St., received the sentence after he was found guilty on both counts.

Miller was one of three defendants charged in the case, which involved the sale of marijuana and the possession of a distillery.

The other two defendants, who were found guilty last month, were sentenced to five years in prison each.

The trial was conducted by U.S. District Judge Peter K. Wachtel.
