The Death of James Fisk.

The announcement that Col. Fisk had been shot, and mortally wounded, by Edward S. Stokes, excited more surprise than regret. His violent and tragic death was regarded as a fit ending to the reckless career which has made his name infamous, and brought discredit on American financial and judicial honesty. The wholesale robber of railroads, and briber of judges, was, in his private life, the associate of abandoned men and women, and his death grows out of one of these disgraceful connections. His intercourse with Miss Helen Mansfield, has been the subject of public scandal for many months, and has been recently made prominent by the attempt of that woman, and her paramour, Edward S. Stokes, to blackmail Fisk, by the threatened publication of his private letters, in which many of the Erie, and other disgraceful secrets were divulged.

Through an injunction issued by Judge Barnard, this plan failed, and Fisk retaliated by instituting a suit against Stokes. The Grand Jury found an indictment against him at Fisk's instance, and the fact was communicated to him only a short time before the tragedy at the Grand Central.

In New York the public feeling against Stokes is quite strong and no matter what Fisk's conduct or reputation has been, this high handed act cannot be justified, and he should receive the full penalty of his crime. The moral lessons of the event are too plain to need comment, and the death of this American Robert Macaire, under all the attending circumstances, will furnish a timely sermon, sadly needed in our business and social life.

SECTARIAN APPROPRIATIONS.—A glance at the past shows the necessity of providing, by constitutional amendment, in this State, against any appropriation of public funds for the use of sectarian schools, charities or churches. During the last five years, the amounts thus appropriated have been as follows: 1867, $294,000; 1868, $141,000; 1869, $121,000; 1870, $525,000; 1871, $570,000; total in five years, $2,031,000. Of these two millions of dollars, about a quarter of a million ($251,000) were given for charitable schools not professedly sectarian. There is only one way to prevent extravagance and favoritism in this direction. There is no middle course. The door must be absolutely and finally closed against all State assistance to sectarian charities. It should be provided in the amendment, that no charitable institution not directly under the charge of the State, shall, under any circumstances, receive funds from the public treasury.

BOSTON IMPORTS.—Boston rejoices because during the first seven months of 1871 the importing business at that port was twenty-seven per cent. greater than it was during the same months in 1870, while that of New York was only twenty-four per cent. greater, and many ports actually lost trade. The boast is not an empty one. The imports at Boston during the months named last year amounted to almost forty millions of dollars. The increase in the value of exports was still more gratifying. In 1870 the weekly average of exports was only $232,500; in 1871 it was $365,300. A remarkable increase is noted in some special lines of trade. For example, the receipts of cotton in 1871 were three hundred thousand bales, or nearly fifty thousand bales more than in 1870, and fifty per cent. more than in 1866. The hide and leather trade has also increased greatly, and the increase in the receipts of breadstuffs for exportation and for distribution in markets heretofore supplied from other sources has been wonderful. With the completion of the Hoosac tunnel, which is now confidently expected before many years, Boston anticipates still greater advances in its business prosperity.

THE FRENCH ASSEMBLY.

The Assassination of Fisk.

New York, Jan. 7, 1872.

The following are all the particulars of the tragedy, as gathered from various sources: The city is much excited, and the air is full of rumors; but the facts are pretty clearly known.

After the decision in the Yorkville police court, on Saturday, adverse to Stokes, he went over to Delmonico's to lunch, and there met Judge Barnard, who communicated the fact to the party that the Oyer and Terminer court had found an indictment against Stokes, when, without a word, Stokes rose hurriedly from his seat, and left the room. He was not seen by any of the persons present at the table until he fired the revolver on the stairs of the Grand Central hotel.—Stokes, on leaving Delmonico's, at once proceeded to the Grand Central hotel, where, by some means, he had ascertained that Fisk was to call. Stokes was observed, by the attaches of the hotel, lounging around the corridors and bar-room of the hotel, apparently unconcerned and without any care. He seemed in good spirits, and noticed several acquaintances who met him there. He was dressed in faultless style, wore a light cream-colored overcoat, white and black cassimere pants, dark undercoat and vest, ruffled shirt, diamond studs, was gloved, and carried a light cane in his hand.

The Murderer Meets his Prey.

A little after four o'clock in the afternoon Fisk's carriage drove up to the ladies' entrance of the hotel. Fisk alighted, opened the first door, behind which was the hall boy, and asked if Mrs. Morse was in. The boy said she was not, but that her eldest daughter was Colonel Fisk after asking the boy to tell the lady he was there, proceeded to go up stairs, and had ascended two or three steps of the stairway.

The Fatal Shots.

Stokes, who had been lying in wait at the head of the stairs, then made his appearance, and saying, "I have got you now," levelled a four-barrelled Sharp's repeating pistol at Fisk, and fired. The ball missed. Again Stokes fired, this time with effect, for the ball entered Fisk's abdomen.

Fisk Game to the Last.

Fisk here showed that he was no coward, for staggering, he attempted to open the door, but seeing a crowd outside, again turned and faced the stairs to be again fired on by the Stokes. This time the ball struck him on the arm and he fell.

The crowd who had gathered around the door burst it in and carried the wounded man up stairs to the parlor where he was laid upon a lounge. From there he was taken to the private reception room, No. 251, and medical assistance summoned.

Conduct of the Assassin.

When he had accomplished his terrible act, Stokes leisurely descended the main stairs of the hotel and went into the bar-room. He had thrown the revolver on the sofa in the ladies parlor as he passed by it. He sauntered to the news stand and bending over the counter, said to Mr. Davidson, the gentleman in charge: "I have been insulted. There's a man shot above stairs. You had better send for a doctor." He was very pale, but did not show any agitation or fear. He then left the news stand and walked across to the bar, as if to take a drink, but apparently changed his mind, for he sat down in a chair.

Stokes and his Victim.

Stokes did not attempt to leave the hotel and was taken in charge by an officer who conducted him up stairs to the room in which Fisk lay on a lounge, and the two enemies even to death were face to face. Police Captain Byrne said, "Colonel Fisk you see this man? Was it he who shot you? And Fisk raising himself on his elbow said:

"Yes, that is the man who shot me. His name is Edward S. Stokes, and I fully identify him as the man." Stokes, during the scene, had nervously twitched his trousers leg with the cane he carried in his hand. The prisoner wore a rigidly dignified air, with a face perfectly immovable, expressive only of intense passion strongly suppressed. There was a singular light in his eyes which he fixed upon the man whom he had assassinated. Some one asked him if Stokes wanted to kill him. Fisk said, "Yes, wanted my life."

The Assassin Conveyed to Jail.

At the conclusion of the identification Captain Byrne clapped Stokes on the shoulder and said, "You will come with me now." Stokes bowed and said nothing but, went with the captain to the Fifteenth precinct station.

Fisk's Ante-mortem Statement.

James Fisk, Jr., being sworn, says: "This afternoon about 4:30 o'clock, I rode up to the Grand Central Hotel; I entered by the private entrance; I entered the first door; I met the boy, of whom I asked if Mrs. Morse was within; he told me that Mrs. Morse and the youngest daughter had gone out, but he thought the other daughter was in her grandmother's room; I asked him to go up and tell the daughter that I was there; I came through the outer door and was going up stairs, and had gone up about two steps when, looking up, I saw Edward S. Stokes at the head of the stairs; as soon as I saw him I noticed that he had something in his hand, and in a second afterwards I saw the flash, heard the report of a pistol, and felt the ball enter my abdomen on the right side; the second shot was fired a moment afterwards; which entered my left arm; when I received the first shot I staggered and ran towards the door, but, noticing a crowd gathering in front, I ran back on the stairs again; I was then brought up stairs in the hotel; saw nothing more of Stokes until he was brought before me by an officer, for identification; I fully identify Edward S. Stokes as the person who shot me.

(Signed) JAMES FISK, JR.

The signature of Fisk was affixed to the document in a steady regular hand, and showed no change from his usual autograph.

The coroner's jury summoned gave the following verdict "That the said James Fisk, jr. received his injuries by a pistol shot, at the hands of Edward S. Stokes, at the Grand Central Hotel, January 6th, 1872."

Refuses to Answer.

The assassin refused to answer any question, by advice of his counsel, and was committed to the Tombs.

After the Shooting

the Surgeons removed Fisk's coat but it was found more difficult to get his shirt off, so it was cut into pieces, and in this way the wound in the arm was disclosed, the blood from which was running in a great stream. The Colonel looked at it bravely and without any apparent shrinking. The shot had passed completely through the flesh, leaving a large, ugly looking hole, like one made by a bullet in a navy revolver. Fisk was asked if that was the only wound and said, "No." He said he had another one, and pointed to his stomach. The physician who had arrived uncovered the wound, and found it a large one, like the other, with very little blood visible. After the doctor had finished his examination for the time, Fisk asked for some brandy and water. After he had drank it the doctor probed the wound, but found that he had no instrument long enough to reach the ball, if it could be reached at all.

Fisk's Fortitude.

While the operation was proceeding and a large number of persons were around him, Fisk maintained his composure, the muscles of his face never quivering and watching the movements of the surgeon with the greatest coolness.

He is not afraid to Die.

After it was through he said to Dr. Triplet, who was the first to attend him, "Doctor, if I am going to die I want to know it; I am not afraid to die, but then if I am going to die I would like to know it beforehand." The doctor replied, "Colonel, you are not going to die to-night, and not to-morrow either, I hope."

The weapon used was a four-chambered Colt revolver. One of the detectives pronounced the bore the largest he had ever seen. The bullet found on the stairway was in size more like a rifle than a pistol bullet.

Arrival of Mrs. Fisk.

Mrs. Fisk arrived at about seven o'clock, and remained by the bed side until all was over. The wounded man gradually failed, and as the morning advanced his pulse still grew more alarming and he became more and more feverish and exhausted. The morphine, which had been given him in large quantities only kept him from terrible agony, and, as it was, his tortures were excruciating, but he bore it all with strange courage. At eight o'clock there was little change; at half-past eight the doctors consulted again, and at nine o'clock the suppressed excitement about his bed was almost too intense to bear. At half-past nine the length of life now depended upon his being kept as quiet as possible. There was by this time a good deal of going to and fro in the sick man's chamber. Messengers were dispatched. He thanked his friends simply for coming and the rapidity of decline showed itself more strongly than ever before. At ten o'clock there was eager and hushed whispering, as it was told, in every ear that the end was surely drawing nigh. At half-past ten he lay scarcely knowing that there was any one ministering to him. He looked at the opposite wall and noticed no one. A few moments later and he was dead.

Fisk's Will.

Fisk's will was made by him last night. It was drawn up by David Dudley Field and was dictated under a painful mind. Mrs. Hooker, his sister, receives $100,000 in the Narragansett steamship company's shares; his father and mother receive $8,000 a year each; to each of the two Misses Morse he bequeathed $2,000 a year; to the Ninth regiment $11,000 (this gift was made a week ago, but was legalized last night); to his wife he bequeathed the balance of his property of all kinds; to Jay Gould, for whom he entertained the warmest and most disinterested friendship, he left his personal effects, and entrusted to him "the labor of love," as it is called in carrying out all of his (Mr. Fisk's) projects in regard to public improvements. Mrs. Fisk inherits all of her deceased husband's shares in the Erie Railroad.

The Murderer.

Stokes' career is canvassed freely. It appears that his father-in-law was obliged to take his wife from him on account of his brutality toward her. She is now in Paris with her brother. Yet some sympathy is felt for Stokes. The Fisk Stokes war has continued in the courts for nine months, and while Fisk has had all the power of the Erie railway corporation at his back, the funds of Stokes have been decreasing day by day, owing to the fact that he had to pay heavy lawyers' fees to carry on the suits. Stokes had expended in lawyers' fees during the last twelve months, nearly thirty-eight thousand dollars, and this contest has beggared him and rendered him desperate. He has often said: "This is a fearful fight that I am carrying on, and I have no one to help me, but I will never give up until I am righted.

Fisk, through his lawyers, has endeavored to make me appear dishonest in the eyes of the people of New York, and I will not yield one inch of my rights, or one dollar of the money that belongs to me." He also has frequently stated that he was afraid of being assassinated by some of Fisk's employees, and has shown a pistol which he carried in his pocket to defend himself if attacked. In addition he has always, night and day, had some friend in his company to prevent attack, as he said that he did not wish to be taken by surprise, as Samuel Bowles was some time since in this city.

The Frail Josie the Cause of All.

The quarrel between the two men has been very much embittered by the woman Mansfield, who has served to fan the embers of the feud whenever it was dying out.

FRANCE.

The Rival Chiefs.

Paris, Jan. 7.

There was an uproarious scene in the Assembly yesterday, the occasion being the reading of a large number of petitions praying for the restoration of the monarchy. Some of the petitions wanted the Count de Chambord and others the Count de Paris for king. The presentation of their rival claims excited the partisans of both princes to frequent demonstrations, while the republicans and radicals made a noisy opposition throughout the meeting, which was frequently interrupted.

The election of Victor Hugo is considered almost certain. It is said that his return to the Assembly will defeat the pending motion for the transfer of the seat of government to Paris, and that the monarchists and the enemies of President Thiers secretly favor his election.

There was an uproarious scene in the Assembly yesterday, the occasion being the reading of a large number of petitions praying for the restoration of the monarchy. Some of the petitions wanted the Count de Chambord, and others the Count de Paris for king. The presentation of their rival claims excited the partizans of both princes to frequent demonstrations, while the republicans and radicals made a noisy opposition throughout the reading, which was frequently interrupted.

The election of Victor Hugo is considered almost certain. It is said that his return to the Assembly will defeat the pending motion for the transfer of the seat of government to Paris, and that monarchists and the enemies of President Thiers secretly favor his election.

The Assembly has elected the Presidents of fifteen of the bureaus. All but three are Conservatives. The Bishop of Orleans is the President of the Bureau of Education.

A select committee of the assembly, appointed to consider the method of forming a new constitution, have made a report, in which it rejects the plebiscitum, and declares it the duty of the National Assembly to make a constitution.

A mortuary statue to the memory of the soldiers of Gen. Bourbaki's army, who perished after the retreat into Switzerland, was unveiled at Lauzanne to-day in the presence of 6,000 persons.

The Coal Strike.

New York, Jan. 8.

The Times Scranton special says: The strike of the coal miners at Wilkesbarre has become general.

Every colliery but one is now idle.

The coal works at Sugar Notch are also idle.

Charles Parrish, President of the Wilkesbarre Iron and Coal Co., insists that 10 per cent. reduction is just and proper and in accordance with the basis.

The general opinion is that the men will surrender unconditionally and recommence work at an early day.

A well founded rumor is afloat that Parish will attempt to place non-union miners in his coal works and trouble is apprehended.

From the Medical Record of November 1st, 1871

Having been requested to state what I know therapeutically of Kennedy's Concentrated Extract of Pinus Canadensis, and furthermore being requested to send it for publication in the columns of your journal, I beg leave briefly to tax your patience and generosity.

For the past six months I have used this extract in many cases affecting the mucous membranes, and in almost every case it has given entire satisfaction. In abrasion of the os and cervix uteri, when applied in its full strength by means of a pledget of cotton, I have found it more satisfactory than tannin or iodine. In endometritis it has proved equally satisfactory. I have used it with perfect success in acute and chronic vaginitis, by applying it in its full strength every other day. I have also used it in several cases of gonorrhœa, and must say that I vastly prefer it to the vaunted remedy of claret and tannin.

It is certainly a most valuable astringent and tonic; and I doubt not that it will very soon have its place in our Materia Medica.
