Parson Kelly

BY MARION DOUGLASS.

Old Parson Kelly's fair young wife
Lived when but three months wed.
And no new love has ever come between
His true heart and the dead,
Though now for sixty years the grass has grown
O'er her grave, and on its simple stone
Ivy leaves
And yellow lichens creep her name across.

Outside the door, in the warm summer air,
The old man sits for hours.
The idle wind, that stirs his silver hair,
Is sweet with June's first flowers;
But dull his mind, and clouded with the haze
Of life's last weary gray November days;
And dim
The past and present look alike to him.

The sunny scene around, confused and blurred,
The twitter of the birds,
Blend in his mind with voices long since heard—
Glad children's careless words.
Old hymns and Scripture texts; while indistinct
Yet strong, one thought with all fair things is linked—
The bride
Of his lost youth is ever by his side.

By its sweet weight of snowy blossoms bowed,
The rose-tree branch hangs low,
And on the sunshine, like a fleecy cloud,
Sways slowly to and fro.
"Oh, is it you?" the old man asks; "I knew!"
And smiles and fancies that her face he's seen
Beneath
The opening roses of a bridal wreath!

Down from the gambrel roof a white dove flits,
The sunshine on its wings,
And lighting close to where the dreamer sits,
A vision with it brings—
A golden gleam from some long vanished day.
"Dear love," he calls; then, "Why will you not stay?"
He sighs,
For, at his voice, the bird looks up and flies!

Oh, constant heart! whose failing thoughts cling fast
To one long land in dust,
Still seeing, turned to thine, as in the past,
Her look of perfect trust,
Her soft voice hearing in the southwind's breath,
Dream on! Love pure as thine shall outlive death,
And when
The gates unfold, her eyes meet thine again!

NELLIE HARWELL'S HOUSE KEEPING.

CONCLUDED.

He wheeled her around towards the mirror, and surely, the picture there presented was not the most attractive one that a young husband might wish to look upon. The ashes which had been evolved from the stove through her unremitting attempts to make a fire, had settled on her hair, until her head was as white as that of an ancient militia captain, powdered for training day. One long curl had dipped itself in the hot water, over which she had been standing in vain effort to scrub the stains from her clothes, and it was straightened out as perpendicular as a candle, and hung, dripping with water, down her back. To finish the tout ensemble, a streak of smut extended from her left temple across her nose to her right cheek, and at sight of the ridiculous figure she made poor Nellie burst into tears. This only made matters worse; but Horace, like a true hero kissed away the tears, soot and all, transferring by far the larger portion of the latter substance to his own face. Then he took off coat, turned up sleeves, and announced himself ready to assist about the dinner. In this respect Horace was a jewel, and his wife blessed him for the generous heart which prompted his ready sympathy. But his abilities as a cook were in no wise equal to his will. He burned the steak, and lost half of it in the fire through the bars of the gridiron, "set" the table with the cloth wrong side out, the knives in the spoon holder, the butter in the preserve bowl, and mistook the pudding dish for the meat plate.

The potatoes were fished out of the pot, boiled to a complete mush; not one particle was left upon another; and Horace, to his wife's dismay, insisted upon straining potatoes and water through the dish cloth, in the hope of saving the remains.

At last they sat down to dinner—baker's bread, suspicious-looking butter, meat, and a pie from the confectioner's. The pudding was to answer for the desert.

"Is there tea or coffee, dearest?" asked Horace, looking dubiously over the table.

"Goodness, if I didn't forget it!" cried Nellie, springing up with such force as to upset the caster, and send the vinegar dancing to the floor. "How much tea will it take for us?"

"I don't know I'm sure," said Horace, slowly. "What does your cook book say?"

Nellie consulted the work.

"'It says 'a quantity proportionate to the size of the family.' How much would that be for us?"

"Well, I don't know; about a cup full, I should think."

So a cup full was put into the urn, hot water was added, and the two housekeepers sat down, and waited patiently for the steeping to be finished. At last the tea was drawn; Horace sugared and creamed it, and put the cup to his lips.

"Good heavens!" cried he in dismay, "it is strong enough to bear up a long-boat. And black, too. No more black ink needed in this house yet a while. We must drink water to-day. There, there, never mind; it was all my worke."

Nellie's tears had begun to flow again, and Horace leaned over the table to kiss her forehead, upsetting the tea at the same time into the bosom of his white vest. The amount of caloric contained in the fluid was decidedly unpleasant, and poor Horace, under the influence of the pain, kicked over his chair, and broke the looking-glass with the flourish of his elbows.

Then he begged Nellie's pardon, picked up the chair, removed the fragments of the mirror, kissed his Niobe of a wife, and sat down to finish his dinner. Alas for his appetite! The steak was nothing but a burnt cinder—outrageously detrimental to molars and incisors; the potatoes were non est; and Horace saved all his powers for the pudding, and he had need of them.

The dessert was brought on, and poured into its appropriate receptacle, and Horace helped himself and his wife to bountiful portions.

"Turk's Island! and crystalized limestone!" cried he, dropping his first mouthful back into his plate.—"Lot's wife must have been imported in the last steamer."

"Why, Horace," exclaimed Nellie in alarm, "what is the matter with the pudding?"

"Saltier than salitudes! Do taste, Nell!"

One mouthful was sufficient.—Nellie's pretty face was screwed up into a hundred puckers.

"Why, Horace, who would have thought it? I only put in half a cup full."

Dinner passed off rather soberly. Nellie was mortified at the ill success of her hard work. Horace was obliged to quit the table hungry; and we all know that a man with an empty stomach, and the prospect of that organ's remaining thus, is a formidable animal.

However, his good humor returned directly. He kissed Nellie good by, and left her to the task of washing the dishes—no easy duty, by the way.

The dinner and its accompaniments were but the prototype of many another dinner. It would be infinitely amusing to the reader to follow Nellie Harwell through the four weeks following her removal to a house of her own.

She invariably forgot to make the bed until she went up stairs to retire; the lamps were never filled until the moment they were wanted; the carpets were swept after she had dusted the furniture; she boiled the calico clothes and the white ones together; made starch of cold water; ironed Horace's dickies wrong side out; sewed up the fingers of his gloves; mistook salt for saleratus, and tartar emetic for salt; burnt the meat, forgot to sweeten the sponge cake, and made a hundred other blunders that every inexperienced housekeeper can imagine for herself.

A month of this kind of existence passed away, and Nellie broached a plan to her husband. Horace was only too delighted to consent. Their house was shut up; the young man went to a boarding house, and Nellie went to Aunt Martha Chase, a widowed sister of her father, who resided in a country town twenty miles away.

Aunt Martha was a lady more celebrated for the excellence of her pies and preserves than for the number of her flounces, and under her tutelage Nellie became in time, what every woman should be, without regard to her station, a good housekeeper. And when at the end of three months she went back to her own house, there were no more salt pudding or burned steaks.

Little lady, think well beforehand, if the adoration of your accepted lover will live after marriage, if fed upon bad bread and black coffee.

A Babe Among the Bears.

A TERRIBLE FALL INTO THE BEAR PIT IN THE ZOOLOGICAL GARDEN.

From the Philadelphia Times, Jan. 16.

Yesterday afternoon a tragical incident occurred in the Zoological garden. A Times reporter happened to alight from a street car beneath the railroad bridge in proximity to the garden simultaneously with a handsome young matron, a nurse girl and a pretty child about four years old. The lady was richly attired, and so juvenile was her appearance that any observer might have thought she was the sister or aunt of the little one that toddled beside her. A moment afterward a light wagon, occupied by a good looking, well dressed man and liveried servant approached at a rapid gait. As it passed the young man stared inquisitively at the lady, who was just entering the gateway, looked back and a moment afterward pulled up, paid the entrance fee and went rapidly up the walk in the direction the lady and her companions had taken. It was evident to the most nonchalant observer that he was smitten by her beauty. On the brink of the skating-pond the reporter again saw the lady and her charges, and saw that the little girl had been entrusted to bear the burden of the baby, which was nearly as large as herself. A few yards away stood the young Adonis, trifling with his long, tawny moustache, evidently desirous of making an impression. After awhile the little girl complained that it was cold and that she wanted to see the bears, so the party journeyed toward the pit where the ursine animals are confined, closely followed by the dashing young man. While trying to induce one of the son bears to catch a chew of "Solace," the reported heard a shriek and saw something white flutter down into the well of the black bears adjoining. The baby had evidently fallen into the pit. In an instant the chivalrous admirer of its mother had mounted the railing, and with wonderful agility sprang out upon the barkless tree in the centre of the well, down which one of the bears was descending with the intention of devouring the small child. He reached the ground almost as soon as the bear, and pluckily grasping the fallen infant, was endeavoring to reascend the tree when another bear came galloping with unsteady gait out of the hole and grasped his coat tail. The cries of those above the cages had been heard by the keepers, and Nash, Scattergood and Superintendent Thompson came running up. In his efforts to hold to the tree, the young gallant relaxed his hold upon the child and it fell into the paws of the first bear. All hope for the poor little creature was given up by the spectators; but Nash unlocked the gate of the den and beat the bears back into their caves.

"Never mind me; save the child!" cried the agile Adonis.

"Come down out of there, you enchanted idiot, or I will have you arrested," was captain Thompson's reply.

He descended and quickly went through the iron portal of the pit.

"The baby?" he murmured.

"My wife and I are very much obliged to you for your gallant effort to rescue our daughter's doll, sir, but do you think the game was worth the candle?" said a stalwart, rubicund gentleman, Charles Seeley, of Green street, upon whose arm the lady, who had excited the admiration of the bear defier, was now leaning, convulsed with suppressed laughter. A glance towards the nurse-girl, in whose arms were the headless remains of a large, wax doll, satisfied the chivalric gentleman and he started for the gate on a rapid walk.

The Cabinet and Cuba.

The Cabinet session to-day lasted nearly two hours. The Cuban question was the subject of discussion but its consideration was not attended by any circumstance of unusual importance.

OTHER STATES.

MISSOURI.

The McKee Whisky Trial.

ST LOUIS, Jan 22.—The United States Circuit Court room was crowded to-day by spectators eager to see and hear everything in connection with the McKee whisky trial. A jury was empanelled with but little trouble, there being but few challengers. The jurors are all from the interior counties of the State and consist of merchants, mechanics and farmers. District-Attorney Dyer opened the case.

C. G. Megrue was put on the witness stand and gave pretty much the same evidence gave by him in the McDonald and Avery cases. Joseph M. Fugroy, who served as deputy collector under Charles W. Ford, and Constantine Maguire was called and testified that on one occasion McKee received a portion of the money which he (whitcas) collected from distillers. It was handed McKee by Joyce in the supervisor's office.

OHIO.

The Geghan Law Repealed.

COLUMBUS, Jan. 21.—In the house the bill to repeal the well-known Geghan law, was passed by a party vote, the Republicans, with one exception favoring it, and the Democrats opposing it.

Republican State Convention.

The Republican State executive committee decided to issue a call for the State convention in this city March 29.

TENNESSEE.

Fire,

NASHVILLE, Jan. 23.—A fire on Market street to-night, which commenced in the hardware store of O. M. Johnson, destroyed five buildings occupied by the Western Union Telegraph branch office, B. F. Adams, Cline & Berheim, Hart & Hessley, Moorman, Higman & Co., all wholesale houses. Loss about $75,000, which is fully insured, mostly in local companies.

THE DOMINION.

The Dominion Board of Trade.

OTTOWA, Jan. 21.—The Dominion Board of Trade to-day resolved that a very desirable treaty of reciprocity with the United States on a comprehensive, liberal and fair basis should be obtained, but the initiative steps thereto ought to come from the United States government.

It was resolved that the Dominion government be memoralized to secure the right of Canadian vessel owners, respecting the use of American canals, notably Champlain canal, where it was stated that the Canadian vessels had been compelled to unload at the first port of entry.

A committee was appointed to urge upon the government the development of the Canadian iron mines.

The board without expressing any opinion on the subject of the combination of workingmen, expressed the belief that the government should be memoralized and take measures to protect shippers in loading vessels against interference by such combinations.

On motion, Mr. Howland, secretary was requested to bring the question of formation of tribunals of commerce again before notice of the government, and W. Robertson, Montreal, was unanimously chosen next President of the board.

A resolution expressive of the gratification of the board at the presence of delegates from the National Board was unanimously adopted.

Mr. Henry, of New York, acknowledged the compliment with thanks, and as President of the National Transportation and Commerce Convention of the United States, he extended a hearty invitation to the delegates of the Dominion Board of Trade to the next meeting, which held in Louisville, Ky., during the Centennial.

A resolution was adopted empowering the president to appoint delegates to the Transportation and Commerce Convention of the United States at Louisville.

After the transaction of some routine business the board concluded its session.

EUROPE.

England.

ROWING AND SHOOTING AT THE CENTENNIAL.

LONDON, Jan. 21.—The Globe says, that at a meeting of the National Rifle Association to-day, it was resolved that the Association should accept the invitation of the national association at New York, to organize a team to represent the United Kingdom in a match for the championship of the world, provided that no other independent team sent from England, Scotland or Ireland, be included in the match. Cambridge will not decide its connection with the American Centennial rowing regatta until the general assembly of the students takes place, when the latter will be considered by the captains of the various boat clubs.

It is rumored that Everest, the paymaster of the St. Louis whisky ring, who was detained as an important witness in the Babcock and other cases, has left the country and gone to Europe again. When the first arrest was made Everest left for Europe, but was assured immunity if he would return to this country and testify for the government. He has been in Washington during the past two weeks and in conference with officials, and promised to remain and go to St. Louis. If he has really left the country an inquiry into the causes that prompted his sudden departure will probably be at once set on foot, for the evidence in Babcock's case will be materially weakened, it is claimed, by his absence.
