CHARLES JOHNSTON ENTERS OBJECTION

Witherbee beat him at the 100 yards. Joe was quite a runner Then I remember a matched race held at the fair time between Fitz and Canada's great champion Pete Duffy, the Ottawa flash. Duffy won that day, although Fitz had beaten him in other races. In those days there was no discrimination about who you ran with, or your status. Professionalism hadn't arrived Fitz used to run in the races all through this section and over in Canada. He won money and prizes of all kinds. Such things did not effect his standing. Races were miscellaneous affairs By that I mean a fellow didn't have to confine himself to just one type of racing, that is. Fitz ran in field days at the college and in many other races, such as those at the fairs. I rather think the University boys always took full credit for Fitz's victories and the records he hung up, no matter the race or where it was run.

"I remember the day he made a record for the quarter mile. I guess this is the record you wrote up in the paper It was made down at the Fair Ground. Fitz collapsed at the finish and they carried him home. That race was in the morning. In the afternoon he was on hand to run the 100 yards dash. He was a great runner for such a little fellow."

"You're right this time," commended The Rounder. "Fitzgibbons wasn't bigger than a pint of cider, he wasn't any taller than you, and was as thin as a rail, but how he could run. He graduated from St. Lawrence in 1882 and then taught school down in Brooklyn. He died there a few years later, of pneumonia."
