

The Old House Dress Ain't What It Used to Be

FIFTY YEARS AGO... In 1898 the standard house dress was a calico wrapper with matching cap, evolving to the "Mother Hubbard" of 1904 and the "Billie Burke" of 1915, shapeless garment which daringly exposed the ankles.

HOW TIMES HAVE CHANGED... Here are three typical house dresses for spring, 1949 (l. to r.): A gay printed broadcloth with pert back bow, a striped chambray with pleated skirt and a bold plaid gingham, with side-tied tunic.

The evolution of the house dress from the days of the Mother Hubbard to its present streamlined smartness follows, more or less, the history of the emancipation of women.

no for beauty but as a sort of coverall.

As women's interests reached outside the kitchen, her sense of style also grew, and house dress manufacturers responded by creating the first strictly American fashions.

Today the housedress industry has a vast scope, making everything from cocktail dresses to sun dresses, pedal pushers, dirndls, two-piece suits, play outfits, tennis and golf dresses, all within a price range of $2.98 to $14.95. Most of the styles are simple and flattering, with practicality a prime consideration. And they're garments that Grandma used to wear.

County Service Workers Hold Late New Year's Party

The Association of Community Service Workers of Cayuga County held a belated New Year's party Wednesday evening in the Y. M. C. A. It was arranged by a special committee headed by Mrs. Alyce Hogart of the city welfare department.

Robert Dannenhauer, boy's secretary at the Y. M. C. A., was chairman of games; Mrs. Stella Finn, of the county welfare department, was chairman of decorations and Mrs. Lacy F. Murdock, public health nurse was in charge of refreshments.

The membership comprises social and community service workers representing practically all social agencies in the county and city. It brought together 32 members.
