SPRINGFIELD CENTER for Youth

Mrs. E. E. Wood, Correspondent.

A youth center sponsored by the New York State Department of Social Services, the Springfield Center for Youth is housed in the former playground of the former Psychiatric Hospital. The Center serves as a recreational and social center for youth who reside in the area.

Though They Have "Town Jobs," Many Men and Women Run Full-Sized Farm Projects in Sparse Time: Strenuous Work, But They Like It

The old saying that "a man's home is his castle" is certainly true in the case of the men and women who live in Springfield Center. Not only do they own and operate farms in the area, but they also contribute to the community by volunteering their time and skills.

In Springfield Center, the Center for Youth has a blend of activities that cater to the needs of its residents. From recreational activities such as sports and music to educational programs, the Center provides a platform for its members to explore their interests and develop new ones.

Rising Tide of Defense Activities Swells Long Island's Air Industries

With the rising tide of national defense, the Long Island area has seen a significant increase in the number of factories and plants, both large and small. These factories are engaged in the manufacturing of various products, from airplanes to electronic components.

Their contributions to the war effort are not limited to the production of military equipment. These factories also impact the surrounding communities by providing jobs and economic growth.

RISING TIDE OF DEFENSE ACTIVITIES SWELLS LONG ISLAND'S AIR INDUSTRIES

With the rising tide of national defense, the Long Island area has seen a significant increase in the number of factories and plants, both large and small. These factories are engaged in the manufacturing of various products, from airplanes to electronic components.

Their contributions to the war effort are not limited to the production of military equipment. These factories also impact the surrounding communities by providing jobs and economic growth.