As a result of Soviet, U.S., French and British nuclear tests, hundreds of thousands of infants will be stillborn or born crippled or deformed because of radioactive fallout. The U.S. Public Health Service estimates that some 60,000 to 70,000 children in fallout shelters will become crippled in years to come; 40,000 will have learned disabilities that impair their ability to function properly in normal society; 4,000 will die from bone damage, and 8,000 will die of cancer. These are conservative figures.

The Committee for Protection of Children from Fallout has been formed to help protect children and the unborn from the effects of radioactive fallout, through information and education regarding the dangers. The personal views of those who have endorsed the Committee are expressed in this advertisement, on pages 3-5.
