Got a hangup? Cal State has cheaper prices!

By KARYN BENT

The Los Angeles Times

Los Angeles — A group of students at California State University at Los Angeles wants you.

In a press release, the college's department of guidance and pupil personnel services is telling people who have problems to stop by the offices of the department, which has the proper psychologists and counseling training.

The college is asking people to come to the offices where they can be helped. It says that the help is free and that the college wants to help people.

The college is asking people to come to the offices where they can be helped. It says that the help is free and that the college wants to help people.

Scathing report for consumers

Nader's raiders vex FTC head

By NORTON MINER

The Washington Post

Washingon, D.C. — A group of consumer advocates led by Ralph Nader yesterday attacked the Federal Trade Commission's job in its handling of consumer complaints.

Mr. Nader and his colleagues are threatening to sue the commission if it does not take action on a series of complaints that have been filed.

The commission has been criticized for its slow response to consumer complaints, and Mr. Nader and his colleagues are threatening to sue the commission if it does not take action on a series of complaints that have been filed.

The commission has been criticized for its slow response to consumer complaints, and Mr. Nader and his colleagues are threatening to sue the commission if it does not take action on a series of complaints that have been filed.

Johnson was hungriest man in America

By ANTHONY HOWARD

The London Observer

London, England — A man who claims to be the hungriest man in America was seen walking along a street yesterday.

The man, who is said to be the hungriest man in America, was seen walking along a street yesterday.

The man, who is said to be the hungriest man in America, was seen walking along a street yesterday.

What we see and hear

Violence and television

By IRIS CARR

The New York Times

New York, N.Y. — Violence and television are two of the most important topics of our time.

Violence and television are two of the most important topics of our time.

Violence and television are two of the most important topics of our time.