In the days when Klutz flew through the air, there was a circus performer named the Elephant. He was a skilled aerialist, able to balance on the back of a bicycle with a basket on his head. The crowd would cheer and laugh as he performed his acrobatic feats.

Old-Fashioned Heroes
Making Comeback on Video
by ROCK HILL

Hollywood (UPI) — Could it be that the American television public is yearning for series with some old-fashioned heroes? And are there enough slightly of shows that make fun of them?

There are signs in the air that such may be the case.

The owners of NBC's "The FBI" and "This is Spinal Tap" are looking toward the view that they have created a new genre in television with their recent series. "The FBI" caught on last season and is still going strong. "This is Spinal Tap" has been a hit with viewers, and both series are expected to continue their success.

Barry Sullivan, who has been a frequent guest star on NBC shows, is now a regular on "This is Spinal Tap." He plays the role of a bumbling detective who constantly gets into trouble, much to the amusement of the audience. The series has been praised for its clever writing and humor, and it is expected to continue to be a hit for many years to come.

"The FBI" has also been successful, with its hard-nosed agents and fast-paced action. The series is set in the 1960s and is a throwback to the days of old-fashioned crime-fighting.

Other series that are expected to continue their success include "The Andy Griffith Show," "The Dick Van Dyke Show," and "The Beverly Hillbillies." All three series are expected to continue for many seasons to come.

With the popularity of old-fashioned heroes making a comeback on video, it is expected that there will be many more series like these in the future. The networks are looking to the past for inspiration, and it seems that they are on the right track.
