Picture a city within a city, and you will have a general idea of how Queens General Hospital coexists with the rest of New York City. The first anniversary of this huge institution was observed last week, on November 18. Now, as it takes its first anniversary, the hospital is on the verge of being enlarged so that it can care for more patients.

The hospital was opened quietly in 1937, under the leadership of Dr. Kogel, who now serves as superintendent. He presided over the opening ceremonies and laid the cornerstone of the new wing.

The hospital is a masterpiece of architecture, with modern facilities and equipment. It is located on the hilltop of Jamaica, where it stands out as one of the finest hospitals in the city.

The staff is made up of 1,300 persons, more than half of whom are nurses. There are also 50 doctors on the staff, including specialists in every branch of medicine.

The hospital is operated by the Queens General Hospital Corporation, which was formed in 1932. It is a nonprofit organization, and all profits are used to improve the facilities of the hospital.

The hospital is divided into three sections: the contagious disease section, the treatment section, and the surgical and medical section. Each section has its own building, and all buildings are connected by a system of elevators.

The hospital is well-equipped with the latest medical and surgical devices. It has a large X-ray department, a laboratory, and a pharmacy.

The hospital is staffed by a large number of trained personnel, including doctors, nurses, orderlies, and attendants. They are all dedicated to the care of patients and work hard to provide the best possible care.

The hospital is open 24 hours a day, 7 days a week. It is equipped to handle all types of patients, from the sick and injured to the elderly and infirm.

The hospital is well-known for its excellence in the care of patients. It has a high reputation for its surgical and medical procedures, and is widely regarded as a leader in the field of medicine.

The hospital is also noted for its contributions to the community. It provides care to all patients, regardless of their ability to pay. It also offers community health services, such as health education and prevention programs.

The hospital is located in the Borough of Queens, which is the most populous borough of New York City. It serves a large and diverse population, and is dedicated to providing care to all patients, regardless of their background or circumstances.
