Peace Needs Stressed As Senate Recesses

WASHINGTON (U.P.)—The latest congressional action in the almost six years of World War II begins today, with a warning that preventing problems of peace remain to be solved even when we are secure.

The Senate released for the long summer recess today after passing a bill for a $100,000,000,000 aid to the Allies for the war. The bill is expected to pass the House, where a special committee is scheduled to report the legislation to the Senate today.

The Senate took no action on the full employment bill, federal housing program, and other measures which have been held up by the Senate's refusal to give them a hearing.

Mead got the floor. He said the measures designed to provide a national housing program and to give aid to the Allies are crucial to our own needs and to the war.

Mead said the measures would be the first step in a program of full employment and the building of new homes.

The session ended with a long discussion of the bill, and a vote of 52-1 to pass the measure. The bill will now go to the House, where it is expected to pass without opposition.

Today, the House is expected to pass the bill, which was introduced by Representative George E. Brown Jr., (D., Calif.), and passed the Senate with the vote of 42-1.

A War Department's demobilization program was called attention to the importance of peace in the reconstruction of society.

The session began with an attack on the full employment bill, federal housing program, and other measures, and ended with a vote of 52-1 to pass the measure.
