Maidenhood and Womanhood

In the excitement and rush of the page and paragraph, there is danger that the true significance of the part played by womanhood in the social life of the world may be overlooked. Womanhood has been profoundly and insidiously affected by the commercial and materialistic tendencies which have dominated the world of today. The trueistributing of goods and services have been directed by men, and the ways in which these goods and services are utilized have been determined by men. Womanhood has been forced to submit to these decisions and accept the results.
