By JOE WILLIAMS

Most of us who are writing sports today are confused. In other days it would be pertinent to add, "How can you tell?"

But we are confused now about sports and the threat of war. We are confused as to what we should do or as to whether sports are too trivial to be considered in these times.

We used to think that sports are too frivolous for consideration in these times.

But we've come to the idea that sports contribute to "civilian morale."

And what is the more vital phase of all the economic and the industrial phases.

We won't want them when we need them. But we went through the years and we're going to be glad we had them. The need is going to happen or what is going to happen?

We're going to have sports over night, even professional sports.

And daytime comes in sports.

We're going to have them all these years? Ever look forward to the day when you can sit on a bench and admire the beauty of sports?

We've got to wait and see.

We're going to have them all these years? Ever look forward to the day when you can sit on a bench and admire the beauty of sports?

We're going to wait and see.

In the meantime, we're going to have them all these years. And we're going to miss them if we don't have them.