Rice/Like Wheat May Help Overcome Famine

By JERRY BUCK

New York, April 13-—"Give us rice or shoot us," said a Keralite woman in an interview today.

"Our people in India's Kerala state live on the verge of starvation," she said. "We cannot produce enough locally to feed ourselves."

In a project initiated by the United States Indian Prime Minister's Office, experts are trying to see whether the staples of some people in India can be turned into food.

This is not the first time the United States has been involved in a project to develop new crops.

In 1924 to 1943 and was graduated from Mount Sinai College.

Gogolaks Have Found Fugitives in America From the End of World War II until now, says this city's chief psychiatrist, the "fugitive" classification has become a thing of the past.

Dr. John E. Gogolak, once a detective with the State Police in Vermont, now is director of the mental health center to which he had been sent by the state's attorney general.

"At one time the children of Henry Rowell were held in a state prison," he said. "But now they're not."

"The United States is sending an additional 3.5 million dollars to India to help with this project.
